Dear Dr. Szilard:

I have your memorandum and in the light of our telephone conversation I have examined my calendar for the next months. The only commitments that I deem unbreakable are to be in New York: On March 9, during the period April 8 through April 16, on Monday night April 29, and on Thursday morning June 13. If meetings were in this country, commitments other than those of April 8-16 need not be an obstacle since I could squeeze them in.

All this without regard to our basic assumption that arrangements could be made here at the University. I have not broached the subject and will not do so until you advise me to. In case arrangements are delayed, you may wish to note that my last day of classes at the University is May 15.

I will wait to hear further.

Sincerely yours,

Louis Henkin

Dear Dr. Szilard:

Pursuant to our telephone conversation of the other day, this will confirm my readiness to participate in your project along the lines we have discussed.

If the discussions are to take place in this country, as you now anticipate, there should be few obstacles to my participation. I foresee none during the period before the beginning of our academic year during the last week of September. If the meetings go on thereafter, I will of course have to consult the authorities here, but it should not be too difficult to readjust some classes, or to postpone them, if I am to engage in these discussions for some two or three weeks. (That was the period you once suggested; if it goes on much longer, some other kind of readjustment may have to be made.) There are only two days, September 19 and 20, that are clearly foreclosed.

Attached is a brief curriculum vitae, containing the information you requested.

Sincerely yours,

Louis Henkin

Dr. Szilard —

a post-script to our conversation
and my letter.

April 29 is the date selected for a meeting in which I am a principal participant. If your arrangements were made soon enough,
before the printing and publicity etc
for that meeting were begun, I could, I think, persuade them to postpone from April 29 to a later date (in May) if that were necessary.
