Grad Students Discuss Gender Issues at Forum

By CYRUS WADIA
Guardian Reporter

In a graduate seminar on gender issues held on Saturday, sexual harassment, career issues, internal politics and race and gender issues were addressed by various members of the administration and faculty at UCSD.

Assistant Dean of Student Affairs Audrey Little addressed the primary focus of the seminar when she described the "campus climate" in 1980 as compared to 1989.

Helene Keyssar, a professor in the Department of Communication and a member of the committee on the status of women said that women have "come a long way since the early 1970s" as a result of the various sexual harassment and abuse organizations and policies that have evolved, and because of the consciousness that has been raised about the gender issue.

She emphasized the idea that "the climate still remains an issue," and while there are legal institutions to deal with issues, "there are very many issues that cannot be dealt with by these institutions."

"One of the affirmative action policies had been altered not to include women—just minorities," Keyssar said.

Because the vice chancellor had decided on this policy, she pointed out that this issue was being addressed "at a level where there weren't women to pay attention to it."

Discussing the issue of female teachers and teaching assistants in the classroom, Keyssar said that women were in a "double bind," because there is a "real problem of authority in a classroom if you're a woman, because if you speak in common discourse, you don't sound as if you know what you're talking about."

Keyssar said that if women "assert their views," they are seen as "aggressive and inappropriate."

She pointed out the fact that in many Course and Professor Evaluations (C.A.P.E.) of female professors and TA's, obscene comments were made about the way that they dressed and how they looked.

"We all have experienced nasty notes and lewd comments from students," she said.

UCSD Post Doc. Files Harassment Lawsuit Against City of S.D.

By SHERRY LOWRANCE
Staff Writer

UCSD post doctoral fellow Walter Woodson has filed suit against the city of San Diego, alleging he was illegally detained and falsely arrested by San Diego Police because of his race and appearance.

Woodson, a black man who wears his hair in shoulder-length dreadlocks, was arrested twice in 1987, once at a bus stop in La Jolla while waiting for a bus to take him home from work, and another time in Mission Bay as he spoke to a friend in a parking lot.

The first incident occurred as Woodson sat at a bus stop on La Jolla Village Drive. According to Woodson, the arresting officer, Raymond Battrick, approached him and said that there was someone stealing in the neighborhood and that he looked like the suspect.

Shortly afterwards, Battrick allegedly changed his story to say that someone meeting Woodson's description had beaten up a police officer in Balboa Park earlier in the day, Woodson said.

When Woodson claimed that Battrick was detaining him based on his race, Battrick became angry, handcuffed Woodson, and pushed him into the back of his patrol car, Woodson alleged. When they arrived at the police station, Battrick found that Woodson had an unpaid fine on file.

"He fabricated the story about someone stealing in La Jolla. He didn't know anything about me until I was handcuffed, put in the back of his car, and taken downtown to the police headquarters, where he finally found that I had an outstanding jaywalking ticket," Woodson said.

Battrick refused comment on the arrest.

Woodson's attorney, Thomas Homann, explained that the lawsuit against the city is based on allegations of "false arrest and illegal detention — [Woodson] was detained as a result of his race and appearance."

Homann went on to explain two legal prerequisites that must be met during the process of an arrest, neither of which, he believes, were met in the arrest of Woodson.

"The police are authorized to briefly detain persons with less than probable cause if suspicious circumstances exist," he said.

But if the suspect is to be arrested, the attorney explained, "the police officer must know facts which make it likely that the person has committed some kind of crime."

Homann claimed that circumstances did not warrant the detention and questioning of Woodson in either instance.

"He was engaging in totally innocent and innocuous conduct at the time," Homann said.

Three Injured at Concert

By MARY BETTY HEARD
Senior Staff Writer

Three injuries occurred during the evening concert of Friday's Sun God Festival, authorities said.

According to UCSD Police dispatcher Andrew Carroll, the first injury occurred to a non-student at 10 p.m. The person reportedly sustained an injury to the left eye while slam dancing. The person refused all treatments except for ice, Carroll said.

At 10:30 p.m. the second reported injury occurred.

"A student was found in the wooded area just west of the Price Center... after ingestion of alcohol. The student was returned to [the student's] residence at the Third dormitories," Carroll said.

Carroll speculated that the student found in the eucalyptus grove had attended the Sun God Festival concert because the grove is near the Price Center, where the concert occurred.

State Legislature Considers Return Of All Native American Remains

LOS ANGELES—The State Legislature is faced with a bill which would require all institutions in possession of Native American remains, such as UCLA, to compile a list of their collections and allow Native American descendants to rebury their ancestors' bones if they wish.

Assembly Bill 2577, sponsored by Assemblyman Richard Katz (D-Sepulveda), would directly affect UCLA, which houses more than 1,000 skeletal remains of Native Americans in the Museum of Cultural History located in Haines Hall.

The remains have touched off a controversy on campus between researchers and Native Americans: Anthropology professors have argued that the collection provides valuable research material and offers an opportunity to investigate the culture of the Native Americans who kept no written history. However, Native American groups have maintained that because of spiritual and religious reasons, they should have a right to decide the fate of their ancestors' remains.

"It's a question of respect for individual cultural beliefs," Katz said.

Native Americans performed culturally rich religious ceremonies to bury their deceased "with the expectation that they would remain buried in the ground. Their excavation is a violation of the custom and tradition of the people. People don't have the right to take that kind of action," Katz said.

"Imagine how families of victims of the Holocaust would feel if the remains of the victims were put on display," Katz said. "We ought to show the same respect that everyone else has accorded to their ancestors."

Large collections that would be affected by AB 2577 are known to be possessed by several UC and Cal State universities.

Support for Prop. 111 Accused of Leading to UC Pay Increase Delay

SANTA BARBARA—A plan to delay merit-based pay raises for University of California staff members has raised cries of foul from some employees who see the move as a university attempt to extort support for Proposition 111.

Proposed by the UC Office of the President, the tentative plan would counter budgetary shortfalls resulting from the Gann Limit, a law which limits state spending on the UC system, according to John McCloud, manager of compensation programs for the university.

If implemented, the plan would delay merit-based pay raises for staff employees by six months. Employees eligible to receive raises in July would not receive them until January.

"The university is having to look at cutting merits for the first time," McCloud said.

Staff merit increases currently cost the university $12 million per year of the total $5.5 billion budget, said Rick Malaspina, a representative from the office of the UC president.

Because of the way the university proposed the possible delays, some UC employees see the plan as a simple advertisement for the passage of Proposition 111.

Proposition 111 proposes a reorganization of the Gann state funding limit. If passed, the UC system could see an increase in its budget.

An April 13 memo from the UCSB Personnel Office outlining the UC funding situation was "clearly an ad for Proposition 111," said Jack Huthsing, president of Local 3241 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, which represents university employees statewide.

Huthsing said if the university withholds merit raises, the union may file an unfair labor practice complaint or a labor grievance. But a labor action such as a strike is essentially out of the question, according to Huthsing.

"It [would be] a joke," he said. "We have 5,000 dues-paying union members representing 26,000 employees systemwide. Our goal is not to let them do this."

Birch Aquarium-Museum Awarded $75,000 Grant by National Institute

A grant of $75,000 to expand educational programs and exhibits has been awarded to the UCSD Scripps Aquarium-Museum by the Institute for Museum Services (IMS), a federal agency serving the nation's museums.

Donald Wilkie, director of the aquarium-museum, attended the awards presentation. The presentation was hosted by First Lady Barbara Bush at the White House on May 18, International Museum Day.

"The IMS funds will be used to develop education programs and exhibits for the new Stephen Birch Aquarium-Museum, scheduled to open in 1992," Wilkie said.

The Stephen Birch Aquarium-Museum will provide extensive educational programs, ranging from preschool classes for children to courses for teachers and science professionals. The new facility will be 2.5 times larger than the present building and will contain 36 marine life tanks.

The IMS awards, which assist museums in maintaining and improving basic operations and services, are highly competitive and are made through a peer review process. The IMS received 1,368 proposals this year, and awarded grants to only 390 museums nationwide.

UC President Gardner to Speak At Budget Hearing in San Diego

Higher education, transportation and senior citizens are the topics for a state legislative budget committee hearing scheduled for May 23 in the County Administration Center, 1600 Pacific Highway, San Diego.

Six representatives of local agencies and UC President David Gardner, Bill Leonard, chair of the California Transportation Commission, and Ralph Paskera of the California State Board of Trustees, are scheduled to speak.

State Sen. Alfred E. Alquist, chairman of the joint legislative budget committee, will lead the hearing in room 358, beginning at 9:30 a.m.

UC Student Association Accepting Statewide Committee Applications

The UC Student Association has opened the application process for student representatives to university-wide committees. Applications will be accepted until 5 p.m. on Friday, June 1.

There are approximately 40 spots open for students on university-wide committees. These committees recommend major policy changes to university President David Gardner and the university Academic Senate on a wide range of issues, including financial aid, affirmative action, fee levels, quality of undergraduate education, and graduate student concerns. They meet from one to 10 times per year, depending on the committee. Committees are composed of faculty, staff, administrators, and students.

Most meetings take place in Berkeley, and the university administration pays for travel, food, and lodging when necessary for the student representatives.

Applications and committee lists are available at the Associated Students and Graduate Student Association offices.

Ac. Senate to Consider Graduation Requirement Change Procedure

By MELINDA HAMILTON
Staff Writer

The Academic Senate will decide on the rewording of the Committee on Educational Policy's current guidelines for requesting changes in graduation requirements tomorrow afternoon.

Stephen Cox, the chair of the Committee on Educational Policy (CEP), said the CEP proposed the change because the current wording of the guidelines is difficult to interpret.

According to Cox, there is no particular problem with the existing policy, and the rewording is for purposes of clarification.

The rewritten policy will clarify that college or department requests made to the Academic Senate to change graduation requirements must allow continuing students to pursue their degrees without interruption.

As written, the CEP's policy advises students "to check with colleges, departments, or other sources of information" regarding changes in graduation requirements and how they affect the students.

The CEP defines continuing students as people who have begun their college education at UCSD or elsewhere before the degree requirement change.

Whether or not students who have left the UC for two or more years will have to follow the new requirements will be up to the discretion of their department or college.

In revising the policy, according to a memo written by CEP member John Conlisk, the CEP considered three alternatives.

The first approach to rewording the guidelines proposed implementing a universal blanket policy, which is very similar to the current rule, he said. The CEP has decided against this, citing the complexity of the issues involved.

CEP also considered creating an elaborate piece of legislation that would deal with a variety of possible problems. The committee ruled this out because it involves developing a set of hypothetical circumstances for various students and requirement changes and writing an appropriate implementation of the rule for each of the students.

The result of this approach, according to Conlisk's memo, "would be a legalistic monster... it would almost certainly mishandle many specific issues; the CEP would inevitably fail to predict all problems ahead of time."

The third alternative requires the college or department requesting a revision of requirements to include the specifics of the implementation of the proposed changes as part of its request for revisions.

The CEP supports the third alternative because the method of implementation would then be the responsibility of the group most involved with the change.

Conlisk said in his memo that the new policy is not designed to solve all possible problems but to generate a uniform guideline to follow.

"This strategy evades the need to resolve ahead of time every possibility that might occur... It is only intended to create a good procedure for resolving issues," according to Conlisk's memo.

If the Academic Senate approves the policy in its meeting tomorrow, it could go into effect as early as next year.

Homann also claimed that there was not probable cause to arrest Woodson.

Referring to the second arrest, Homann said, "At some time the police officer did not like Dr. Woodson's attitude." According to Homann, the only suspicion the arresting officer... had was "an anonymous 911 call from the vicinity with no description, probably a prank call."

Woodson said that instead of investigating the 911 call, the arresting officer "decided an illegal drug transaction was taking place in the parking lot."

Woodson said that when he asked the arresting officer why he

The Co-op Controversy

The Way to Autonomy

The dispute between the university administration and the co-ops began in November 1989 as what appeared to be a simple conflict over keys. The university's position was — and still is — that the co-ops are using university facilities, equipped with university doors, therefore requiring university locks. The co-ops objected and refused to sign the space agreement, claiming autonomy from the university, as well as citing potential security problems.

Now, almost six months later, the issue has shifted further away from keys and is focused on the exact status of co-op autonomy.

The problem is not as clear cut as it appears. It is all too easy to say, "What difference does it make if the co-ops are on the university system or not? Why don't they quit whining and just sign the lease?"

That is not the solution. The initial dispute revolved around section 5.07 of the Student Center space agreement, titled "Key Issuance and Usage." The clause states that all co-ops must be on the university master key system, and that the administration will issue keys to co-op members.

The dispute was complicated when a compromise between the University Center Board (UCB) and the co-ops was rejected by Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Joseph Watson. The compromise did not require the co-ops to be on the university key system. According to a letter by Watson, the new UCB-co-op lease agreement is "not an option," and the key clause is not negotiable.

However, Article VI, section six of the UCB charter gives the board the authority to negotiate such lease agreements.

As a result of Watson's letter, the UCB passed a resolution last Monday requesting an Academic Senate investigation of "the university administration's usurpation of the [UCB's] authority to allocate space and negotiate leases in facilities funded by student fees." The board's idea is to hopefully gain faculty support, which is a step in the right direction. The faculty carries a great deal of prestige, and their endorsement would carry much more weight than the rantings of a few overly-agitated students venting their frustrations on the gym steps.

A much greater problem the co-ops need to contend with is the distinct possibility of eviction. Ultimately, if the space agreement is not signed, eviction could become reality, and that would be disastrous for the co-ops.

But section 5.06 of the general space agreement is a much greater threat than section 5.07 ever was. The clause states that on expiration of the lease agreement, all equipment, merchandise, and assets must be delivered to the UCB. In other words, if the co-ops decide not to sign, they would not just lose their space, but everything. All of the former co-op merchandise and assets would become part of the university.

Furthermore, according to the "Co-op Operations and Procedural Guidelines," published by the University Center business office in 1975, the co-ops do not "own" any equipment they may have purchased. According to the guidelines, the University Center's definition of "ownership" is a sort of loan. All assets (including any profits generated by the co-op) and equipment are "in care of" the co-op. That is, assets belong to the co-op as long as they exist, and remain on campus. The University Center will not acknowledge the existence of any co-op off campus.

These regulations are ridiculous. Co-ops are housed in student-funded facilities, and are owned and operated by students, for students. To claim that any profit generated by the hard work and effort of students ultimately belongs to the UC Regents is absurd. The co-ops need and deserve complete financial autonomy.

The UCB's recent resolution is one of many steps in the right direction. Bizarre rallies in front of the Main Gym, such as the one that occurred on Monday, are not.

The administration will not pay attention to a group of zealous students ranting about "fighting the power." Bureaucracy can be fought with bureaucracy. The UCB's request for an Academic Senate investigation is one way. A.S. President John Edson's proposal to form a special appeals board is another. Face-to-face negotiation — with the assistance of professional legal counsel — with the administration is a must. Certainly, the process is slow, but the stakes are high, and the potential reward — official autonomy — is well worth the wait. The student co-ops must organize in a respectful fashion.

The days of building blockades are over. Now is the time for serious negotiation.

LETTERS

UCSD Athletes Do Not Get Deserved Support

Editor:

This letter is in response to the letters appearing in the May 17 issue in regard to the support, or lack of, given to the UCSD women's water polo team.

While understanding that decisions on news coverage are necessarily subjective, clearly the news of a potential national championship is both newsworthy and of great reader interest. National championships of any stripe only serve to bring prestige and greater recognition to the entire student body.

The issue here is not whether the Guardian gave us adequate coverage, but where the letter writers find satisfaction in stating that a sport, such as water polo, is not worthy of front page coverage.

Perhaps if the Guardian had been able to give our team additional coverage over the course of the season, fan attendance may have been stronger.

It may be true that water polo does not draw as many fans as does a football game at a major university, but perhaps if any of these letter writers attended a couple of sporting contests at UCSD, they would see that water polo attracts as many, if not more, fans than many of UCSD's other sports.

UCSD students show a general apathy toward all intercollegiate sports programs. UCSD athletes do not gain the recognition, nor support that they deserve. The Guardian, while being unable to promote our team through weekly articles, but then printing letters that state "nobody cares about the women's water polo team," is directly contributing to the apathy expressed towards all intercollegiate sports already apparent in the general population of the school.

The letter writers prevent UCSD sports programs from gaining the recognition they deserve. It is unfair to make the state-mate sport by their lack of respect for an accomplishment such as winning a national championship; not to mention the fact that we went undefeated against Division I, II, and III schools.

Winning a national championship is front page news and I am sure that so-called "respected institutions" would address this accomplishment as worthy of the front page of their school's paper.

Our accomplishment made the front page of The San Diego Union; why not the front page of The UCSD Guardian?

Letter writers, while you three may be a part of the apathetic portion of UCSD, that does not give you the right to state that our National Championship trophy is anything less than a spectacular accomplishment.

That fact that students wrote a letter stating we are a "so-called champion team" infuriates me. It is obvious that none of the students writing play an intercolle-

Article Filled With Inaccuracies

Editor:

As president of UCSD's student chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME), our club appreciates any press coverage we can get. That's why we were so glad to hear the Guardian intended to write about our surprise upset at the annual Human-Powered Vehicle (HPV) contest at San Jose State University last month. However, I can't ignore the appalling reporting of the event that appeared in the Features article, "All It Took Was a Little Human Power," in the May 7 issue of your newspaper.

Although the story was well-written, it was laced with gross inaccuracies and distortions of the most basic facts. The reporter only interviewed two people for the article, myself and Alan Payne, yet he attributes quotes to three people, one of whom doesn't exist in our organization — Joe Collier. In addition, the name of our club was reported wrong. It was written as SME.

In at least one case, the reporter missed the gist of our conversation. The unofficial name of our vehicle was "Chapter 11" since our funds were so limited and we were competing with schools with budgets 10 times larger than ours. By the time it reached print, our vehicle was called "Channel 11." Why? I don't know. And I'm sure neither did anyone else, since that title makes no sense.

Finally, the reporter fused together the results of two different races in which we competed, getting none of the facts straight. We finished third in the road race portion of the Collegiate HPV Championships, an upset victory behind UC Berkeley and San Jose State, and 10th in the overall competition. In the La Jolla Grand Prix, we were the first college to finish the race (ahead of the only other college to enter, SDSU) and we finished fourth overall. According to the Guardian article, we finished first in the HPV race, ahead of UC Berkeley and San Diego State.

It's great to get recognition from the press for our accomplishments, but we can't lobby for more funding or promote our organization with information which is blatantly false. I don't know whether this is representative reporting by the Guardian or whether it's a problem with one incompetent or improperly trained writer. Either way, I'm sure the Guardian wants to be known as a professional, reputable newspaper. I know one thing. From now on, I will be hesitant to believe the accuracy of anything I see on the Guardian's pages.

Derogatory Editorial Had No Right To Judge George Winne's Action

Editor:

Regarding your editorial on the death of George Winne Jr. ("Reconciling a Passionate Act", May 21): You said "One cannot help but wonder if Winne would have better served his cause by fighting for peace instead of dying for it."

This kind of derogatory rhetoric is a bitter pill to swallow, coming from a newspaper which finds it proper to run military and CIA advertisements, and rarely does anything other than minimize or marginalize campus activities and activists for peace and social justice.

James Field

While Ms. Catherine Dille's article on the George Winne memorial on Revelle Plaza was perhaps the most accurate and satisfying article of any UCSD article covering an event I was present for, it does not mollify my anger over your editorial.

Until The UCSD Guardian ceases to be an active participant in the "War Machine," it has no right to judge or attempt to direct the efforts of any of the courageous, beautiful people who struggle daily for peace and social justice.

Crass Letter Points to Apathy

Editor:

I couldn't help but be a little disturbed with Darryl Binniaz's comment on George Winne Jr. ("Winne Was Not a Hero," May 14). How can Darryl express an abhorrence for war, yet in reference to Winne's death, make only the crass utterance, "To me, he's dead." This comment is a perfect example of the widespread apathy and acceptance of the horrors of war in which we are socialized.

I don't know if Winne should be termed a "hero" because he sacrificed his life in protest of the war. I do, however, think that we should reflect upon the circumstances surrounding his death. The tragic alternative that Winne sought is a testimony to the desperation many feel toward the absurdity of war and the degeneration of human morality.

It is interesting to me that the people who are quick to excuse Winne's response as a cop-out will still claim a "hero" in one of the persons whose name is etched in the Vietnam Memorial. And what a sick paradox — that the mass of people will admire a person who murdered at the will of his government, yet condemn a man who dies as a plea to stop the killing.

To Live Is to Dare to Be Stupid

By DANA CHAIKEN, Sports Editor

"I'm not scared of anything."

I said that to a friend of mine almost three years ago, and, at the time, I believed it.

I really didn't think an event, activity, challenge, or situation existed that I was afraid of or couldn't handle.

I was wrong. I know that now. Well, not really wrong, just a little off base in thinking that absolutely nothing scared me.

I think I probably should have said that nothing I chose to do scared me. Whatever I chose not to do terrified me to the point of avoidance.

Now I realize that if I avoided something it wasn't because I was scared of the actual act; I just didn't want to look stupid while doing it. I only agreed to things I felt confident I could handle without the possibility of playing the fool.

When I was a younger kid (I say younger because I plan to remain a kid lege career, I decided that if I didn't start to talk, I wouldn't ever make any friends, and that would make for one unhappy college career. (Why it's called a career, I'll never know. I think of it more as playtime before real life begins.)

I also arrived at the conclusion that fear of stupidity in word or action is, well, stupid.

Everyone plays the fool at some point — some more than others — but not nearly as often as one succeeds. Therefore, by limiting my chances because of fear of the unknown, I also limited my success possibilities.

I'm almost ecstatic that I'm learning to share my thoughts and feelings, without compromising my ability to help anyone who needs a friend with open ears and a closed mouth.

As far as looking stupid in activities, well, blast it, I just don't care what other people think anymore. If I want to do something, I'm going to go do it — and for life), I was only comfortable doing anything athletic. I climbed trees that even King Kong might shy away from. I played basketball and baseball with (gasp!) the boys. This latter activity cost me four months in a cast with a broken leg, but that's another story.

I waltzed if I felt I was on solid ground because I felt comfortable in what I was doing, but I had two left feet if I felt lacking in familiarity. I could handle anything if it involved a ball, but the thought of using words scared me into silence.

I could always hold my own in sports. I only had trouble when it came to social activities. I was one cool customer on the athletic field, but I froze up when I had to talk — not play — my way through something.

I waltzed if I felt I was on solid ground because I felt comfortable in what I was doing, but I had two left feet if I felt lacking in familiarity. I could handle anything if it involved a ball, but the thought of using words scared me into silence. Not really, but close.

Unless I was with my closest friends, I was one of the quietest people around. (I've always wondered how I got comfortable talking with my friends if I couldn't talk to them enough for them to become friends.)

This history of silence may come as a bit of surprise to those who are victimized by my current syndrome of spouting off, but it's true. People used to encourage me to talk, but now they plead for silence; they used to wonder what was up if I revealed a command of the English language, and now it's the same effect if I'm quiet for a spell.

All this from a Communications major. Go figure.

I sometimes still wonder how I got through high school, but I think it's because I either claimed flexibility ("I don't care, you decide") or I just let others talk while I listened.

I got the reputation of a patient listener, that most people find a rare trait, simply because I had nothing to say. Not a bad deal, and I even liked listening.

Why, or how, did I change?

Well, about the time I was heading down to San Diego (yes, I'm another Northern Californian) to begin my collect self respect be open to ridicule.

Of course, it helps if I have someone teaching me the ins and outs of an activity currently foreign to me, so I can watch and learn without asking questions. I used to say far — Star Wars galaxy-type far — away from any situation where I didn't have a clue what to do or say.

Before, if I had to do something unknown to me, I just let someone do it for me without revealing that I was watching them to learn, not to see if they were doing it right.

This kind of learning without asking is a difficult trick, and I finally got tired of playing social magician.

In college, I've put away my top hat — I never had a white rabbit, but I did have a guinea pig (another story) — and decided to try. I'm glad I reached that point because I've not only learned a tremendous amount since that decision, but also had a hell of a lot of fun.

Since I came to San Diego, I'll admit I've learned to dance (my younger sister never thought I would), along with numerous activities such as racquetball, innertube water polo, and the latest, surfing, in which I made a complete idiot out of myself the first time.

Racquetball didn't prove to be my sport, but I retired from tube polo with three championships. Surfing? Well, that's still experimental.

Two days worth of being called a rookie by my teacher/friend, in whose language "rookie" is the same word as "klutz," hasn't lessened my determination to master my new board, the waves, and surf etiquette and language.

The bottom line here is: Sometimes things work out, and conversely, sometimes they don't, but never be afraid to at least try. If you never try you may seemingly never fail, but you really do fail.

I can hardly imagine how boring my life would be like without having decided to try things I was afraid would make me feel stupid at some point.

GENDER: TAs, RAs Discuss Sexism at Saturday Seminar

Aside from addressing the gender issues, Keyssar also posed some solutions to the problem.

She said that "women should get together and talk about these issues and educate their individual departments."

She also recommended putting "on all departmental course and professor evaluations a warning: that none [of the evaluations] will be counted if they include sexist or racist comments."

She also described a response to gender hostility that has taken her 25 years to learn — "Lighten up rather than tighten up!"

Panel discussions were also held to discuss other issues that affect Graduate Students.

The forum's organizers said that although this year the seminar was "targeted for women students," a similar seminar will be held next year, in which gender issues will be discussed and addressed by members of both sexes.

The third injury reported on Friday evening happened at 11:15 p.m. A student was found on the Price Center floor after ingesting penicillin and alcohol at the same time. The student was taken to a local hospital emergency room, Carroll said.

WOODSON: Lawsuit to Be Heard in June

Diego Police Academy director, declined to comment on Woodson's allegation, due to the pending lawsuit. He did, however, explain that the academy meets or exceeds all the standards required by the Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training (P.O.S.T.), a regulatory commission that mandates what is taught in state police academies.

According to Howell, one P.O.S.T. regulation requires that trainees learn to "avoid prejudging individuals based on cultural origins or socio-economic status."

Another regulation mandates that trainees "communicate with representatives of different cultural and socioeconomic groups."

Because of these P.O.S.T. regulations, Howell explained, the San Diego Police Academy requires mandatory classes in "cultural specifics."

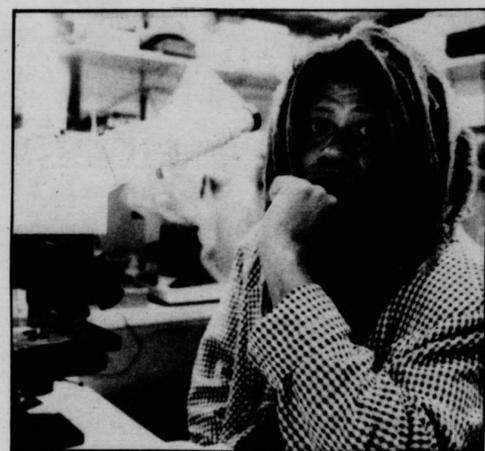

"We take our trainees in a bus for two days to different parts of San Diego to meet with representatives of different cultures and to educate trainees about the various cultures in San Diego" as a part of these classes, he said.

Responding to allegations of illegal procedures in the arrests, Robinson said that officers need probable cause to arrest someone.

Woodson, however, does not believe that there was probable cause to arrest him.

"It was a question of noticing a person who looked different, a person of a different color, and a person that not only knew how to ask questions but to ask them the right questions at which they would get angry," Woodson said.

Woodson's suit against the city of San Diego will begin on June 29 at 9 a.m. at the Superior Court of San Diego, Department 1.

Gail Johnson/Guardian

Woodson's suit is scheduled to be heard next month.

California's Drought and UCSD

HIGH AND DRY...

California Drought Will Affect County And UCSD

• Story by Becky Rheim
Guardian Reporter

On a typical sunny day at UCSD, the sprinklers everywhere water the lush, green lawns, people leisurely wash their cars, and buildings and sidewalks are watered down for a cleaning. Judging from this familiar scenario, no one would know that UCSD and the rest of the state of California are in the fourth year of a severe drought.

Despite the severity of this drought, UCSD has not had any restrictions placed on its water consumption.

Today, however, the San Diego Water Authority will decide whether county water restrictions will be voluntary or mandatory.

According to Jack Hug, the UCSD assistant vice chancellor of Physical Plant Services, a 10 percent reduction in water use at this university will be implemented even if water conservation in San Diego remains purely voluntary.

According to the Water Management Program, a water conservation plan formed by Physical Plant Services, UCSD's water conservation efforts will begin June 1.

Many students feel that UCSD has not made many attempts to conserve water throughout campus — the sprinkler systems being the most popular example of alleged water abuse pointed out by students.

One problem, which is the basis of student complaints, lies in the fact that the sprinklers on campus run during and after rainfall.

However, because there are more than 300 separate control stations for the sprinklers, it is difficult to turn them off manually when it rains, Hug said.

But the sprinkler problem is not being ignored, according to Hug. He explained that UCSD is slowly upgrading its technology and hopes to eventually consolidate the irrigation controls into a more manageable system.

Drip irrigation systems have been installed, for example, in certain areas, such as along Gilman Drive.

Other conservation efforts include watering the campus lawns only at night or in the early morning, between 6 p.m. to 8 a.m., minimizing evaporation. The Water Management Program suggests using alternate and reduced schedules for watering.

Drought-tolerant plants, such as the ones on the south and west sides of the Price Center, will be used when greenery areas are replaced or refurbished. Low-flow toilets will also be installed, like the ones currently in the Pepper Canyon Apartments. In addition, a water awareness program will be implemented throughout UCSD.

Another issue of concern among students lies in the continuing use of the Reville fountain. Under the Water Management Program, no fountains can be used unless the water is recycled. Both the Reville fountain and the Institute of Americas fountain currently use recycled water.

How likely is it that UCSD will succeed in its 10 percent cut-back? In comparison, UC Santa Cruz, in its 1988 drought year, instituted a mandatory water reduction.

According to Hug, the UCSC campus, which has similar ratios of consumption to UCSD, used conservation techniques similar to those proposed here. UCSC was successful in cutting its water use by 20 percent.

UCSD uses approximately 564 million gallons of water per year. Despite the growing campus population, the total water consumption this year was actually slightly down from previous years.

Where do the millions of gallons of water per year go? The Housing and Food Service facilities consume 40 percent of the total UCSD water, followed by 35 percent used by campus instruction, research, and service facilities, and 25 percent allotted to grounds and landscape areas. The 10 percent water use reduction will be taken from all of the areas of water consumption.

For every minute that the average person takes a shower, 10 gallons of water a day are used purely by the residential students of UCSD for their daily showers.

And how many people like to wash their dishes, brush their teeth, and shave with the water running? The average student who resides at UCSD uses a total of 120 gallons a day.

Considering that almost half of the water consumed at UCSD goes toward residential use, the gallons of water wasted by students can go into the millions.

Perhaps many students do not conserve water because they are not fully aware of the severe drought situation due to the seemingly carefree use of water throughout the UCSD campus and Southern California in general.

But any students coming from the Santa Barbara area are likely to be acutely aware of the effects of the drought. Currently,

WATER: UCSD Plans to Cut Back Consumption

Santa Barbara is most drastically affected by the drought. Throughout Santa Barbara, it is illegal for residents to water their lawns, hose off their sidewalks, or use sprinklers.

Santa Barbara residents can wash their cars only when they use a hose with a shut-off nozzle, and Santa Barbara employs "Water Police" who watch for any illegal water abuse.

However, Santa Barbara residents are not subject to an official mandatory rationing.

San Diego County also has not adopted mandatory water rationing.

But according to the San Diego County Water Authority, San Diego's main supplier of water, the county must adopt significant reductions in water use as soon as possible.

The San Diego Water Authority (SDWA) supplies water to 97 percent of San Diego County residents, approximately 2.4 million people.

According to the SDWA, without a reduction in water use of 10 percent, San Diego would barely be able to scrape through this year's drought.

No reduction in water use would also create a desperate situation for next year, according to the SDWA.

California is at a peak of water consumption which is still increasing yearly despite the statewide drought.

How severe is this drought? In a normal year, San Diego's rainfall averages about 10 inches.

In 1989, however, San Diego reported only 3.2 inches. But San Diego does not rely on rainfall for its water supply — 93 percent of San Diego's water is imported.

Where does San Diego's water come from? The authority purchases the majority of its water from the Metropolitan Water District (MWD), one of the world's largest water agencies.

MWD obtains 55 percent of its water from the Colorado River aqueduct, and 35 percent from Northern California.

From 1987 to 1988, the overall water use in San Diego increased from 616,319 acre feet in 1988 to 665,360 acre feet in 1989.

One acre foot is 325,872 gallons, or the amount used by two average households in one year.

The Colorado River, San Diego's major source of water, is shared between Nevada, Arizona, and California.

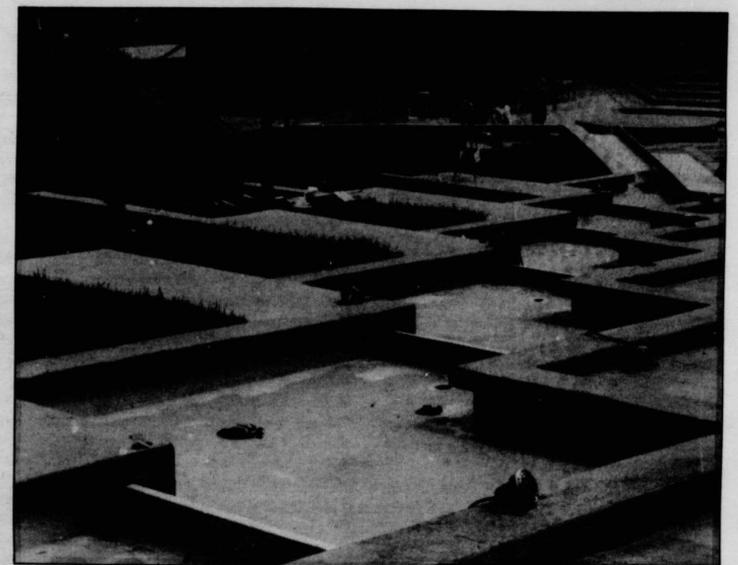

Because Arizona did not need much water in the past, California has been able to use the river's surplus.

However, Arizona is currently demanding more water, directly lowering the amount available to California.

San Diego may eventually have to restrict its water consumption, following in the footsteps of Northern California communities that have successfully reduced their water usage by 20 percent in recent years.

Some parts of San Diego have enforced water restrictions since last year.

And it may be only a matter of time before the rest of San Diego is forced to undergo mandatory water conservation.

Ed Lim/Guardian

UCSD will attempt to reduce its water usage by 10 percent, even if water conservation in San Diego remains purely voluntary.

Red Hot Chili Peppers' Kiedis

'We Do It When We Feel Like It'

By LARA HEISLER and JENNIFER YANCEY Associate A&E Editors

"Hey you mister interview/I don't have to answer you," Red Hot Chili Pepper Anthony Kiedis sings in "Funkycrime." Kiedis brought these lyrics to life on Saturday, when Hiatus approached him for an interview. Kiedis was in town to emcee for the Alpha Kappa Psi Fiesta Bay Foot Race so we, in classic Enquirer style, showed up at 7 a.m. to get the scoop. Kiedis was less than excited to see us.

The Red Hot Chili Peppers are the quintessential nasty boys. Naked, tattooed, long tresses flying, funk'n' it up, they personify the frenetic energy which can be seen in the slam pit in one of forming in smaller venues comes to mind. Kiedis reassured, "We'll be playing laundromats, 7-11's, Taco Time from time to time, but no Denny's."

On a more serious note, he explained, "We play all kinds of venues depending on what part of the world we are in. If there is demand to play somewhere bigger, then we'll play it, because it's not fair to play someplace small, because people can't get in. But we also like to play smaller venues — we do a guerilla warfare thing where we go up onstage and play."

Kiedis was not exaggerating when he expressed concern about his availability to his audience. One thing that separates the Red Hots from most other bands is their ability to be both accessible and friendly to fans while maintaining the mystique of being in such a cool band. In the past, the Red Hots have been known to go to McDonalds or play basketball with fans. Will this have to come to an end? "People are officially and formally not allowed to play basketball with us anymore. I contacted my lawyer, and he won't allow it," Kiedis sarcastically replied.

"There is a cheez line, and it's difficult [to know when you're crossing it]. Here's an example — we just got asked to do a song for a Disney film that is called 'Taking Care of Business,' which is the title track to the movie. Initially, we didn't want to do it — we didn't feel that it's our thing — but we realized that there is room for humor in our music... so if it's something that we think is funny, we might do it, but we always insist that we have creative control over this type of thing," Kiedis concluded.

When the Red Hots do have creative control, the outcome is amazing. The most animated outlet of this creativity is their ability to energize a crowd into a frenzy while maintaining a unique feeling of intimacy. As demand for their shows is growing by the day, the question of whether they will be able to continue performing in smaller venues comes to mind. Kiedis reassured, "We'll be playing laundromats, 7-11's, Taco Time from time to time, but no Denny's."

On a more serious note, he explained, "We play all kinds of venues depending on what part of the world we are in. If there is demand to play somewhere bigger, then we'll play it, because it's not fair to play someplace small, because people can't get in. But we also like to play smaller venues — we do a guerilla warfare thing where we go up onstage and play."

Kiedis was not exaggerating when he expressed concern about his availability to his audience. One thing that separates the Red Hots from most other bands is their ability to be both accessible and friendly to fans while maintaining the mystique of being in such a cool band. In the past, the Red Hots have been known to go to McDonalds or play basketball with fans. Will this have to come to an end? "People are officially and formally not allowed to play basketball with us anymore. I contacted my lawyer, and he won't allow it," Kiedis sarcastically replied.

"We're just human beings like everyone else. Everybody is a star," Kiedis informed us. "We don't look at ourselves differently now than we did a few years ago. We make music, which is sacred to us — but we don't look down on anyone else."

The music that they make really does fall into the "sacred" category that they share with some other alternative/college radio classics. In the song "Good Time Boys," the Red Hots praise the bands Firehose, Fishbone, Thelionious Monster, and X with good reason.

"All of the people in those bands are my friends and they're all part of the same sort of music community — the underground music community — of honest music and there's very little of that in the world today," Kiedis explained. "It's important that we stick together because we're part of a dying breed — we don't want the ship to sink so we try to support each other," he concluded.

The Red Hots have started a trend of their own. Their fusion of funk, rap and thrash is highly imitated. If you've gone to any Battle of the Bands, you can probably see the Red Hots influence among the up-and-coming bands. "Imitation is the greatest form of flattery. The reason that I started to perform is because I was emotionally moved by funk music. If people are emotionally moved by RHCP music and want to play like us, it's a good thing," he said.

No strangers to imitation themselves, the Peppers cover songs by artists ranging from Bob Dylan to Stevie Wonder to Jimi Hendrix. "We only choose people [to cover] that we truly believe in, because the music moves us — it's our way of showing our respect to people who inspired us in their lifetimes, and they are also just good tunes. We add our own flavor to it," Kiedis clarified.

The Red Hots have a flair for the obscene, and are often linked with sex. Small wonder, when they perform onstage wearing but a sock. Kiedis explained the reasoning behind the sock attire: "We do it when we feel like it, but we've been doing it less and less. What happens is that people begin to focus too much of their attention on the sock trick — it is fun, and exciting, and it feels good to play naked because it's kind of an expression of freedom, and the RHCP are about freedom — but when people can only see [the sock] and not hear the music, it's a distraction." With or without the sock trick, the Red Hots seem quite preoccupied with sex. These are the boys who wrote "Sex Rap" and the special secret song.

When he's not making music, Kiedis is busy "designing women's underwear — you know, bras, panties, G-strings, lingerie, nipple clips..." or hosting charity events, such as the Foot Race on Saturday.

Kiedis didn't host this event out of his love for college students or fraternities, even though he himself "was a college kid once" at UCLA. He explained his involvement: "I didn't look at it as a fraternity event. The reason that I did it was because they told me it was for Easter charity like Easter Seals, then I usually try to make myself available."

Just as the Red Hots' music is difficult to pin down to any one style, Anthony Kiedis cannot be pinned down to one stance. Call him aloof, call him amiable; think him a pervert or a philanthropist; revere him as a guru or an idiot. A sense of the unexpected is the key to unlocking the complexities of the Red Hot Chili Peppers.

You think you know something about a lip-sneering, fist-shaking, hip-swinging, motorcycle-straddling, leather-clad rock 'n' roll star, huh? You probably do, but make sure we're talkin' about the same star. No, it's not Elvis. See if you can guess exactly who this dude — let's call him Mr. X — is...

- Mr. X likes to dance alone. As a matter of fact, he wrote a song called _____.
- In one music video, Mr. X forces a wedding ring onto a bride's pale white finger until he draws blood. What is the name of this song?
- Fill in the blank: Mr. X's former band Generation _____ was a big punk band from England in the late 1970s. (Now, wasn't that hard?)
- Where does Mr. X have a tattoo of a woman?
- Who was Mr. X's guitarist? (hint: it sounds like one name repeated twice... kind of.)

Vaudeville 'Brief History of the Universe' Just Wasn't Brief Enough

By MICHAEL SCHWARTZ Staff Writer

Entering Mandeville Auditorium last Wednesday, one couldn't help but notice that the seats were mostly empty. Perhaps it was because it was the middle of the week, or maybe it was because the show wasn't very well publicized.

After sitting through the evening's performance, however, it seemed most likely it was because everyone else in La Jolla knew something that those in attendance did not. Missing the a touring comedy troupe Vaudeville Nouveau is a classic example of ignorance being bliss.

Billed as "A Brief History of the Universe," the show consisted of a series of standard circus juggling acts with a mind-numbing patter on various bits of physics and evolution. This was all accompanied by an amazingly annoying electronic musical assault and flashing of strobes and colored lights.

Granted, for every force, there is an equal and opposing force. The forces of evil and boredom were counteracted by some sparsely-located bits of humorous material. A juggling exchange with rings, colored on one side, white on the other, provided an interesting metamorphosis of images.

Also entertaining was an attempt at blindfolded juggling that kept resulting in clubs slamming to the stage to the loud cry of "I missed! So what?" After a vow of suicide if the stunt failed another time, followed by another failure, one of our fearless entertainers produced a gun and walked offstage with it. After the sound of a shot, he walked onstage, and still alive, to the declaration of "I missed!"

Perhaps the most memorable moment was the simultaneous playing of two recorders, first in the mouth, and then in the nose.

Unfortunately, these moments were lost in a vast sea of endless, unfunny banterings about science. Some people may argue that the voyages of these men, in surreal pursuit of the true meaning of the universe, served as a wondrous bit of performance art. But even performance art has to be entertaining.

There is a chance that the group (Dan Mankin, Jeff Raz, and Mark Sackett) is simply trying their hand at intellectualism after such lightweight romps as "Savage Chicken" and "Aesthetic Peril." If this is the case, these genies should run, not walk, back to their roots. It is with their intricate hat manipulations and rubber chickens that this group's talent dwells.

If Vaudeville Nouveau is anything like vaudeville vieux, it is a grand thing, indeed, that vaudeville died. That most likely is not the case, but with this trio's current touring performance, don't count on a resurrection any time soon.

events, they'll be All-American if they perform like usual," Stanforth said.

Perhaps the Tritons' best hope for a first-place finish is Shannon Quigley, who has the nation's best throw in the shot put. She also has the number two mark in the discus entering the meet.

In addition, Quigley, a junior, is the defending national champion in both events.

UCSD will also bring discus throwers Rachel Beerman and Shelley Squibb to the national meet.

If all goes as planned, the Tritons could claim three of the top five spots in that event.

Stanforth is also enthusiastic about the chances of sprinter Erica Washington in the 100 and 200 meters, and the 4x100m relay.

Washington will be aided in the 4x100m by teammates Yvette Marzullo, Vicki Dunckley, and Michelle Milledge.

"If Erica matches her earlier times, she should be in the top five in the 100 and 200, and our 4x100 team should be up near the top also," Stanforth said.

The women's contingent also includes high-jumper Susan Christy, along with long-distance runners Michelle Conlay (qualifier in the 3000, 5000 and 10,000m) and Denise McFayden (qualifier for the 3000m).

On the men's side, the Tritons only bring four qualifiers, but Stanforth is still optimistic about the squad's chances.

"We should definitely do a lot better than last year (a five point team total) and could score between 20 and 25 points," Stanforth said. "That would be good for about a tenth-place showing."

Just like last year, the Tritons are extremely strong in the throwing events.

They go into the meet with the nation's top hammer-thrower Scott Sargeant, and the number three man in the discus, Paul Cogbill.

Sargeant also has the nation's eighth-best effort in the discus this year.

"The men should get most of their points in the throwing events, and it would really boost our point total if either of them wins," Stanforth added.

Triton runner David Myers has an excellent chance to win in the 800m, as he boasts the nation's fifth-best time heading into the meet.

"The 800 is going to be really close this year," Stanforth said. "There are a lot of guys who have very similar times. I think Dave will be right in there at the end."

UCSD also brings long-distance runner Merrill Hora to Naperville, where he will compete in the 5000m for the Tritons.

In the men's team competition, host and defending national champion North Central College looks strong again, and Lincoln University should also be in the running to win it all.

"No one ever really dominates from year to year on the men's side, like Christopher Newport does in the women's," Stanforth said. "Any of a number of teams could win this year."

According to Stanforth, the two teams are better prepared than ever for this year's event because of the unusually high level of competition the Tritons have been running up against all year long.

"Our people have gone against some of the best athletes in the world this year in some of our meets.

"They won't be intimidated by the people they'll be competing against at nationals," Stanforth said.

In addition to this, Stanforth feels that UCSD's record 14 qualifiers will help to ease the stress for individual Tritons.

"All of our team will have a lot more moral support than usual, and no one will feel like they have to win it all by themselves," he noted.

Nomads Face First Division German Team

The San Diego Nomads will face the 1988 First Division European Cup Champions from Germany Wednesday night at Torrey Pines High School.

Kickoff is set for 7:30 p.m. The Nomads feature several UCSD ties including Head Coach Derek Armstrong, who is also the UCSD men's soccer head coach.

Among the players featured will be former Triton star Mike Bradley, who is now the captain of the Nomads in just his second season with the team.

Bradley has completed his four years of collegiate athletics eligibility but is still attending UCSD.

Coaches' Association, rolled past three unseeded players — each in two sets — for a rematch with Wellesley's Karen Cooper, who defeated her last year, but went down easily this time, 6-2, 6-4.

After capturing the singles title, Behrens hooked up with senior partner Susan Carney in the doubles tournament, pulling off their second two-set victory for a ticket to the semifinals of the 16-team draw.

But, Behrens' fourth match of the day, the second-seeded pair were upset by Leslie Gale and Marcia Hunt of Carleton College, 6-4, 7-6 (8-6).

"They were way ahead in the tiebreaker of the second set and expected to win and go on to the third set," LaPlante said of the All-Americans. "They were just shocked that they had lost."

In other singles play, first-year player Robyn Inaba showed her exhaustion from the team play with a 6-3, 6-2 first-round loss, according to LaPlante.

LaPlante believes that Inaba, who was named the ITCA's Rookie of the Year, has the same potential as Behrens to win the singles title, and "is stronger mentally now than Behrens was in her freshman year."

4 count. Belloli, ranked 34th at midseason, had an easier time in his matches, blowing away Dan Lindquist of Wheaton in the opener, 6-1, 6-2, and upsetting Ivanovich, ranked eighth at midseason, 6-7 (4-7), 6-1, 6-0.

Francois Monnar, the third Triton participating in individual play, lost in the opening round.

For their efforts, Belloli and Huber were both named to All-American singles and doubles teams.

All-American candidate Devin Thomas will lead UCSD into the 72-hole National Championship.

Tritons Darkhorses for Title

By BRIAN ITOW
Senior Staff Writer

The ninth-ranked Tritons are considered long shots to capture the NCAA Division III golf championships.

Their chances this time, however, are probably better than they have ever been.

Even though they have finished second three of the last five years, the Tritons have never really had a realistic shot at capturing the national team championship.

It never seemed to matter how well the Triton golfers were playing entering the tournament.

They always hit the same stone wall: CSU Stanislaus. The Warriors have been one of the true dynasties in college sports, having captured seven of the last 12 Division III championships.

But now they are gone — graduated to Division II.

And, they have left the field for this year's 72-hole tournament as wide-open as ever.

Five teams will tee off at the Indian Mound Golf Course on Jekyll Island, Georgia with a legitimate shot at capturing the NCAA Division III national title. Methodist College of North Carolina enters the tournament as the top seed, but, by no means can they be considered clear favorites.

Ohio Wesleyan, Skidmore, Gustavus Adolphus, and UCSD's state rival CSU San Bernardino all have the talent to shoot their way to a national championship.

A number of other schools, including UCSD, are considered dark horses in the tournament.

In fact, if everything falls right, so to speak, the Tritons could walk off with their first national golf championship.

According to UCSD Head Coach Mike Wydra, the Tritons will need conditions that are as nasty as possible in order to make winning the title a possibility.

"We're hoping to get lots of wind and difficult conditions. Most Division III caliber players don't have the talent to do well in these conditions; they tend to excel on pitch and putt courses," he said.

The Triton players, on the other hand, are used to playing difficult in conditions. And if they get them, they could sneak into contention.

No matter what the conditions are, All-American candidate Devin Thomas is expected to excel in the tournament, and will be in the front of the race for the individual title.

He has played consistently all year, leading the team with a 75.5 stroke average.

As added incentive, he only has to remember last year's debacle when he fell from second to 20th on the last day of the national championship tournament.

Thomas will head the Tritons' five-man scoring group which includes Mike Reinhardt (78.4), Bob Knee (78.5), Bobby Meyerson (79), and Matt Stottern (80).

Reinhardt, the team's lone senior, has been playing well of late and could appear on the NCAA individual leaders board.

Knee has played consistently all year and will solidify the team's number three position.

Meyerson, a junior transfer, has been a pleasant surprise, according to Wydra.

Though not a long hitter, he is accurate, and his play around the green is among the team's best.

The fifth spot was won by Stottern who edged Campbell Waldrop in a three round qualifying contest.

"We are taking a strong team to the national tournament," Wydra said.

"Our problem all year has been trying to get everyone playing well at the same time. If we can do that, a top three finish is a strong possibility, and a national championship is not out of the question," Wydra said.

Behrens Caps Career With Singles Title

Senior Christine Behrens waltzed to a long-awaited championship, yielding a mere 24 games in five matches.

By DANA CHAIKEN

"Christine Behrens has an excellent chance to be the top Division III player this year."

—UCSD women's tennis Head Coach Liz LaPlante.

LaPlante said that in 1987, but she was wrong. She also could have said it in 1988 and 1989 — and she would have been wrong.

But in 1990, senior Christine Behrens finally fulfilled her coach's expectations.

On Saturday, in Trenton, NJ, Behrens captured her first Division III individual singles national title in her fourth — and final — attempt.

After a second place finish in 1988, the one year she was unranked, and losses in the quarterfinals in the other two campaigns, the top-seeded Behrens cruised through the 32-player field, ending with a 6-4, 6-2 victory over fourth-seeded Tracy Peel of Washington College (MD) in the final.

"She played the greatest she's ever played," LaPlante emphasized. "She was focused all year, and wanted it more than before. She definitely dominated."

Belloli and Huber Stopped in Doubles Semis 6-2, 6-4

By PETER KO

At the Division III National Championships in Swarthmore, PA, members of the UCSD men's tennis team accomplished what, in recent years, they have not been able to do as a group — advance past the first round.

Sig Huber and Chris Belloli, the Tritons' number one doubles team, roared to the semifinals on Saturday before skidding to a halt against Scott Milener and Bobby Hessian of the University of Rochester (NY), 6-2, 6-4.

Huber and Belloli advanced to the semifinals after blitzing Louis Miller and Jim Osowski of Kalamazoo, 6-4, 6-3 in the first round, and Eric Chan and Andrew Chekian of Claremont, 5-7, 6-4, 6-4, in the second.

In the quarterfinals, the pair knocked off Steve Ivanovich and Vivak Sidhoran of the University of Chicago, 6-3, 6-4.

The semifinal loss to Milener and Hessian was an upset of sorts as Belloli and Huber had been third in the Volvo Tennis/Collegiate Rankings at the midway point of the season, while Milener and Hessian were ninth.

The loss closed the books on the two's record for the season at 13-4.

In singles play, Belloli and Huber again led the way, as both advanced to the round of 16 before losing.

To reach the final 16, Huber, sixth in the rankings at midseason, fought off Dave Jusilla of Gustavus Adolphus, 3-6, 6-4, 6-1, and Tim Smith of Connecticut College, the latter of whom he defeated by a 6-3, 2-6, 6-

TRACK AND FIELD NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIPS

The Triton men will try to improve on last year's five-points, while the women have their eyes on a possible national title.

POWER IN NUMBERS

Track and Field Has Its First Real Shot At a Top Showing as the Tritons Take a Record 14 Qualifiers to the National Championships in Illinois

By LES BRUVOLD
Staff Writer

The UCSD men's and women's track teams may be headed for their best ever overall showing in the Division III National Meet, as a school record 14 qualifiers are scheduled to compete in the three-day event that starts Wednesday at North Central College in Naperville, Illinois.

The women's squad has the better chance of the two at making a noticeable impact, since it is taking 10 Tritons to compete, while the men will field only four participants.

Following a fourth-place team showing last year, the women's team is expected to finish in the top five again, and possibly even higher.

"If they all perform up to the level they have all year, I think we should finish as well as we did last year," Triton Head Coach Mark Stanforth said.

Stanforth pointed out that, although the women's team should score more points this year, its competition has also improved.

Christopher Newport University, which has won the women's title each of the last three years, looks to be the clear favorite again, with Occidental, Wisconsin-Oshkosh, UCSD, and Cortland State-New York following closely behind, according to Stanforth.

Several Triton women may finish in the top ranks individually, and should claim All-American status in their respective events.

"If you finish in the top eight in any event, you are named to the All-American team.

"And, since most of our women place in the top five in their
