AFTER ORLANDO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 7 AT 7PM

An evening of short plays to bring about social justice

One night only! Tickets are only $15!

After Orlando will bring together five local theatre companies, San Diego Repertory Theatre, Inner Mission Productions, Diversionary Theatre, Moxie Theatre and The Old Globe Theatre, in partnership to support our LGBT community and take a stand against gun violence.

This special event is an international playwright driven theatre action including over-seventy playwrights from the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom, Africa and Australia. Plays have been specifically written and curated in response to the shootings at Pulse Nightclub in Orlando, Florida. The plays will be read at over 40 venues across the country and in the UK throughout the fall.

Ticket sales from After Orlando will benefit Latino Services at The Center and The San Diego chapter of the Brady Campaign. Latino Services at the Center provides a safe, welcoming, and culturally and linguistically appropriate space that allows community members to accept and embrace every aspect of their identities, including their culture, traditions, language, spirituality and sexual and gender identities. The San Diego chapter of the Brady Campaign is committed to promoting the mission of the Brady Campaign locally, with the goal of making our communities safe from gun violence.

13 Things Ruined by the 2016 Election

BY LES FABIAN BRATHWAITE

WED, 2016-11-09 13:45

Donald J. Trump will be the 45th President of the United States. Never thought I'd have to write that, but here we are. While America collectively freaks out—out of joy, bewilderment, fear, anger, disappointment, or any combination thereof—at the prospect of a Trump presidency and its myriad doomsday scenarios, let's not forget all we've lost on the sad, dark road to this historic (?) moment.

Here are 13 things ruined by the 2016 election.

The Mainstream Media

The election of Trump serves as an indictment of the media—that is to say, the "liberal," or "elitist," "left-wing," "mainstream"— —media, which almost unanimously anointed Hillary Clinton the next president, while revealing the cavernous culture gap across the nation. As for "conservative" or "alt-right" media, well, they've just been validated super hard so say goodbye to "facts" forever.

The amount of misinformation prevalent during this election was beyond troubling—it was catastrophic. With each of us most likely insulated within our little liberal or conservative news bubbles, the opportunity for misinformation to find a foothold in our brains increased with each false story/infographic/poll/etc. And while those fake or heavily biased news items were easily disproved by some independent fact-searching, facts didn't matter in this election. Like, at all.

Faith in Democracy

The 2016 election was like having a front row seat at the making of the American democratic sausage, or maybe its unraveling; at times it was equally fascinating and nauseating to watch.

What it revealed was a complete dissatisfaction with the government from both sides—both Bernie's and Trump's popularity was predicated on a desire to change the status quo because for many people, the status quo had failed them. Or had left them behind. Or they just didn't understand the status quo, or like it, or think it was an American citizen. To some of Trump's followers, a vote for him was, as Michael Moore said, a giant “fuck you” to “the establishment” or something along those vague lines.

Trump was able to walk away with this election not only because he spoke to that general institutional dissatisfaction, but also because, as he so often claimed, the election was rigged. Not in any overt ways, but rigged by the RNC through its very successful efforts at redistricting, minority voter suppression, and the gutting of the Voting Rights Act, so that even if Clinton won the popular vote, the electoral system has been weighed heavily and unfairly in Republican favor. Democracy ain't always what it's cracked up to be.

Polls

Remember when Donald Trump would tout all these polls that had him ahead and we were like:

Because nearly every poll showed Clinton with an advantage for much of her run and going into the election—not a big advantage, but an advantage nonetheless. Well, it turns out, that polling this election has been way off for any number of reasons. So it will be a long time before anyone wants to hear anything poll-related outside of a strip club.

“Post-Racial America”

The theory that race was no longer an issue in this country arrived with the election of Barack Obama, but that theory was blown out of the water with the increased white nationalist presence around Trump's campaign. This country is built on such a fragile, corrosive, racially-charged history that is impossible to hide and incredibly difficult to change. Trump's election in many ways is the symbolic taking-back of White America, a rebuke of Barack Obama and all that he's come to stand for—diversity, inclusion...cool black dudes. In America, it has been proven—once again—that a white man, especially a white man with money, can say or do anything and get away with it.

The Two-Party System

Bernie Sanders' influence on Hillary Clinton's campaign and the DNC platform—the most progressive in its history—should not be overlooked and for many who felt the Bern during, and after, the primaries, he represented the need for the Democratic Party's reform, or a new party altogether. Meanwhile, the GOP's kowtowing to Trump and the alt-right only caused more dissension within its own ranks.

Though Gary Johnson and to a lesser extent Jill Stein (and to a lesser extent Susan Sarandon) will inevitably be held accountable by dispossessed Democrats, third parties will be an even more viable and vital element in elections going forward. The 2016 election put on display a nationwide disillusionment with the two major parties and how out of touch they've become with their respective bases.

America's Dignity

You realize, don't you, that America is now the basic bitch of the western world? We've hitched our wagons to the loud, abusive, misogynistic, racist, etc., etc., etc. guy who promises he'll treat us well but will most likely just end up fucking us over. And since reproductive rights are on the table, there will be long-term repercussions. Donald Trump, with the help of his Aryan brother- and sisterhood, dragged the American electoral process into the mud, breaking all the rules of decorum that had existed for over 225 years. And he's now made it okay for other politicians and would-be politicians to follow in his footsteps by carelessly insulting and alienating entire swathes of people and behaving in a manner that's even offensive for reality TV, from where we will now exclusively find our future leaders.

By accepting Trump as our president, America is telling its citizens and the world that this is who we are now, that this behavior is acceptable, that treating others different from you with suspicion and resentment is okay. It's inconsequential whether Trump's supporters explicitly believe that because with their endorsement their belief is implicit.

Dear Undocumented Students and Allies,

The Undocumented Student Services Center is here for you. The results of the election have caused much uncertainty and anxiety in our community and that is why I want to repeat: We are here for you.

Over the last couple of months I have had the pleasure of meeting many of you. You have shared with me your personal stories and dreams for the future. My goal since day one as coordinator of Undocumented Student Services is to ensure that those dreams become a reality. Although the President-elect has expressed his views and plans for the future, I believe there is the possibility of a different and better future for our country; a future that we will build together.

In California and throughout the nation, pro-immigrant leaders, many of whom are elected officials, have stated their commitment to ensure the immigrant community is protected from unjust policies proposed by the upcoming presidential administration. Many of these pro-immigrant leaders have pledged to use the full extent of their offices and influence to protect our communities. I want you to know that this office and UC San Diego are committed to supporting undocumented students in their pursuit of higher education. Undocumented Student Services does and will continue to:

1. Provide you with a safe and welcoming space in which we will listen to your needs and seek solutions that address those needs.
2. Facilitate access for you and your family to trusted immigration legal services. We understand that the proposed policies don't just affect you, but also your family.
3. Minimize factors jeopardizing your education, so that graduation is your first priority.
4. Work with our faculty, staff, and student body to ensure that we continue to promote our Principles of Community and embody them in the programming and services that we offer you.

Working together I am confident we will find the strength needed to continue to thrive in this country as students, families, and community.

Sincerely,
Daniel Arturo Alfaro Arellano
Coordinator

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

Everyone has certain basic rights, no matter who is president

NOVEMBER 10, 2016

By now everyone knows that Donald Trump has been elected president of the United States and will begin to serve his term in January 2017. No matter who is president, everyone living in the U.S. has certain basic rights under the U.S. Constitution. Undocumented immigrants have these rights, too. It is important that we all assert and protect our basic rights.

If you find you have to deal with Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) or other law enforcement officers at home, on the street, or anywhere else, remember that you have the rights described in this factsheet. The factsheet also provides suggestions for what you should do to assert your rights.

- ✓ You have the right to remain silent. You may refuse to speak to immigration officers.
 - Don't answer any questions. You may also say that you want to remain silent.
 - Don't say anything about where you were born or how you entered the U.S.

- ✓ Carry a know-your-rights card and show it if an immigration officer stops you.
 - The card explains that you will remain silent and that you wish to speak with an attorney.

- ✓ Do not open your door.
 - To be allowed to enter your home, ICE must have a warrant signed by a judge. Do not open your door unless an ICE agent shows you a warrant. (They almost never have one.) If an ICE agent wants to show you a warrant, they can hold it against a window or slide it under the door. To be valid, the warrant must have your correct name and address on it.

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS!

If you are stopped by immigration or the police:

- ✓ Hand this card to the officer, and remain silent.
- ✓ The card explains that you are exercising your right to refuse to answer any questions until you have talked with a lawyer.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Please be informed that I am choosing to exercise my right to remain silent and my right to refuse to answer your questions. If I am detained, I request to contact an attorney immediately. I am also exercising my right to refuse to sign anything until I consult with my attorney. Thank you.

1121 14th Street, NW, Ste. 200
Washington, DC 20005
202 216-0261
202 216-0266 fax

- You do not need to open the door to talk with an ICE agent. Once you open the door, it is much harder to refuse to answer questions.
- ✓ You have the right to speak to a lawyer.
 - You can simply say, "I need to speak to my attorney."
 - You may have your lawyer with you if ICE or other law enforcement questions you.
- ✓ Before you sign anything, talk to a lawyer.
 - ICE may try to get you to sign away your right to see a lawyer or a judge. Be sure you understand what a document actually says before you sign it.
- ✓ Always carry with you any valid immigration document you have.
 - For example, if you have a valid work permit or green card, be sure to have it with you in case you need to show it for identification purposes.
 - Do not carry papers from another country with you, such as a foreign passport. Such papers could be used against you in the deportation process.
- ✓ If you are worried ICE will arrest you, let the officer know if you have children.
 - If you are the parent or primary caregiver of a U.S. citizen or permanent resident who is under age 18, ICE may "exercise discretion" and let you go.

Because Donald Trump has made many anti-immigrant statements, ICE and other law enforcement officers may think they can get away with violating your rights.

Sometimes ICE officers lie to people in order to get them to open their doors or sign away their rights. If ICE detains you or you are concerned that they will conduct raids in your area, this is what you can do:

- ✓ Create a safety plan.
 - Memorize the phone number of a friend, family member, or attorney that you can call if you are arrested.
 - If you take care of children or other people, make a plan to have them taken care of if you are detained.
 - Keep important documents such as birth certificates and immigration documents in a safe place where a friend or family member can access them if necessary.
 - Make sure your loved ones know how to find you if you are detained by ICE. They can use ICE's online detainee locator (<https://locator.ice.gov/odls/homePage.do>) to find an adult who is in immigration custody. Or they can call the local ICE office (<https://www.ice.gov/contact/ero>). Make sure they have your alien registration number written down, if you have one.

- You can call the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR) hotline number at 240-314-1500 or 1-800-898-7180 (toll-free) 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to get information on your case's status.

✓ Report and document raids and arrests.

- If it is possible and safe for you to do so, take photos and videos of the raid or arrest. Also take notes on what happened.
- Call United We Dream's hotline to report a raid: 1-844-363-1423.
- Send text messages to 877877.

✓ Find legal help.

- Nonprofit organizations that provide low-cost help can be found at www.immigrationlawhelp.org.
- The immigration courts have a list of lawyers and organizations that provide free legal services: www.justice.gov/eoir/list-pro-bono-legal-service-providers-map.
- At <https://www.adminrelief.org> there is a search engine into which you type a zip code and then are given a list of all the legal services near you.
- You can search for an immigration lawyer using the American Immigration Lawyers Association's online directory, www.aialawyer.com.
- The National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild also has an online find-a-lawyer tool: <https://www.nationalimmigrationproject.org/find.html>.

✓ Learn more about your rights.

- Read NILC's tips on how to prepare for a raid—in English or Spanish.*

Frat parties mocking Black History Month, homophobic slurs, anti-Mexican graffiti on campus, and sexual harassment...these reoccurring events affect ALL students, underrepresented or not, and demonstrate the need for a conversation about student experiences related to the campus climate at UC San Diego. Join the conversation and submit your creative work!

The UC San Diego Library is creating a "living archive" as an alternative way to highlight awareness, provide a space for dialogue, and preserve and document events related to UC San Diego history. A living archive is a collection of materials presented in a way that allows for the expression, exhibition, documentation, and preservation of a sentiment or movement in a particular community. This type of "archiving" is "living" because it is constantly updated with the current climate and consists of all manner of expression from documents of the past, to creative expression through art, to real-time feedback of the current period.

We want YOU to be a part of the Living Archive. What do you have to say or express about the current climate at UCSD?

Information on the project and how to submit work is here: <http://lib.ucsd.edu/howucit>

The physical exhibit will run from February 1 - March 31, 2016 in Geisel Library, with a permanent online collection of submissions. Deadline for submissions is November 30th and you must be enrolled as a current UCSD student. Paintings, drawings, collages, prints, sculptures, photographs, performance art, written work, video or film are welcome!

What a Trump presidency could mean for LGBT Americans

By Emanuella Grinberg, CNN

Updated 1:04 PM ET, Mon December 5, 2016

These are Trump's key promises for his first 100 days 01:02

Story highlights

- Gay, lesbian and transgender people fear diminished civil rights under President-elect Donald Trump
- While Trump has been called "LGBT-friendly," critics say the party platform is anything but (CNN)The election of Donald Trump and running mate Mike Pence set off panic in gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender communities across the country, as people worried which of their divisive campaign promises would come true.

Would the President-elect make good on his pledge to repeal the Affordable Care Act, which protects transgender people from discrimination in accessing health care? Will he appoint conservative judges to the US Supreme Court who could roll back marriage equality and other civil rights? Will Pence's long-ago support for so-called "conversion therapy" translate to a directive for LGBT youth?

Questions such as these flooded the offices of LGBT advocacy groups nationwide following Trump's victory early Wednesday.

Despite being regarded by some as one of the most "pro-LGBT" Republican presidential nominees ever, who expressed sympathy for the LGBT community after the Orlando nightclub shooting, critics say his conservative advisers -- Pence included -- and the Republican party's anti-LGBT platform are a threat to the progress made during the Obama administration's legacy.

"We're hearing from really, really scared people," said Rachel Tiven, CEO of Lambda Legal, a nonprofit legal advocacy organization. "We're seeing a fear of an atmosphere of intolerance that began with Trump's campaign."

Spokespeople for Trump and Pence did not return requests for comment.

The Human Rights Campaign, which supported Hillary Clinton, held a Facebook Live broadcast on Thursday to address some of the concerns. Here's what their experts and others from national LGBT groups had to say.

Protesters take part in a demonstration against Donald Trump's presidential election victory in Los Angeles.

Is this the end of same-sex marriage?

Many same-sex couples worry that their marriages could be invalidated in Trump's America, or that if things are getting serious they better hurry up and make it official before their right to tie the knot disappears.

Neither the President nor Congress can take away what the Supreme Court has deemed a "fundamental right," leaving current marriages safe, multiple legal experts said.

While Trump does not have the right to unilaterally scrap marriage equality, he has the power to appoint Supreme Court justices who could.

So far, judicial conservatives are said to be very pleased with his potential nominees. But it would take a long time for the court to repeal marriage equality -- if they decide to, Tiven said. Regardless of who replaces Justice Antonin Scalia, the five Supreme Court justices who ushered in marriage equality will remain. The jurists that replace them could be the ones that bring change.

By then, though, advocates are optimistic that society will have adjusted to the idea and let it be.

"People's hearts and minds have changed," HRC legal director Sarah Warbelow said. "We've had rights rolled back but it is rare."

What about same-sex adoption?

Gay and lesbian parents are worried that their parental rights could be in jeopardy, especially for the non-biological parent.

Even if that person's name is on the child's birth certificate, experts say it's best to adopt the child.

Also called a second parent adoption, it's a court order that says as a legal matter the adult is a parent, said Jennifer C. Pizer, senior counsel and law and policy director of Lambda Legal.

Though the states set adoption and parental rights policies, adoption ensures both parents have a legal tie, which could help in challenges to parental rights at the federal level.

"Court judgments are recognized from state to state as a constitutional rule so even if federal law changes you're a parent of the child," she said.

Does this mean more 'bathroom bills'?

North Carolina's controversial HB 2 got most of the attention, but 2016 brought similar proposals to regulate bathroom access for transgender people across the country. Advocacy groups fully expected the ball to keep rolling regardless of who captured the presidency.

LGBT rights: The national battle of the bathroom

"It was clear in 2016 that we saw an upswing in anti-trans legislation, more than we'd ever seen before," said Transgender Law Center Executive Director Kris Hayashi. "We anticipated that was not going to lessen but increase in 2017."

In response, advocacy groups have been training across the country for more legislative battles, he said.

"What is needed in this moment is for transgender leaders to continue the work we've been doing advocating and organizing for our rights."

What about transgender students?

The Obama administration's recommendation to schools to treat transgender students in accordance with their gender identity drew cheers from advocacy groups and criticism from conservatives, including Pence. Trump said transgender people should be protected under the law but rejected the use of federal law to do so, saying it should be left to the states.

Even if Trump rescinds the Obama administration's guidance, the laws upon which it was based won't change, said David Stacy, Government Affairs Director of HRC.

The directive is largely based on Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments, which forbids discrimination based on gender. In recent years, trial court and court of appeals decisions have interpreted Title IX to cover sexual orientation and gender identity, too, extending its protections to the LGBT population.

"Schools have an obligation to follow the law whether the guidance is repealed or not," he said. "When it comes to recognizing a name change, or the use of bathroom facilities, under federal law schools have a legal and moral obligation to treat all students with dignity and respect."

Will I lose my Obamacare?

Repealing the Affordable Care Act was a benchmark of Trump's campaign. Of the 20 million Americans covered, about 5% are gay, lesbian, bisexual or transgender, Stacy said.

The Affordable Care Act has a non-discrimination provision that includes gender identity and sexual orientation. It was especially meaningful for transgender people, who often face discrimination when they try to access gender-affirming health care. Taking away Obamacare would mean removing those protections, Stacy said.

But it remains to be seen how Trump would actually do this, leaving groups in a holding pattern for how to respond.

Is conversion therapy going to be legitimized?

As far as we can tell, at no point in the presidential campaign did Vice President-elect Pence talk about supporting conversion therapy, a widely discredited practice that claims to undo homosexuality.

But in his run for Congress in 2000, his campaign website said he endorsed using federal funds to support "those institutions which provide assistance to those seeking to change their sexual behavior."

The position has been widely interpreted as signaling Pence's support for conversion therapy, according to Snopes.com. It got a new life during his run for executive office, leading to panicked calls from LGBT youth who are "terrified" that they'll be forced into conversion therapy, said Pizer of Lambda Legal.

Because the practice has been widely rejected by mental health professionals and outlawed in some states, it's hard to imagine that it could ever gain credibility or become law, Pizer said -- even with the support of an elected official.

"It's up to parents to make lots of decisions for their kids, but mental health professionals know that this type of effort to change who people are is not effective," she said.

Will I still be able to serve in the military?

Though anything could happen, it's "exceedingly unlikely" that Pence's opposition to the repeal of "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" will reverse the decision to let gays and lesbians serve openly in the military, said Warbelow of the HRC.

Transgender service began this year, too, signed off on by the chairs of each military branch, she said.

"Regulations are not easy to undo," she said. "The military leadership of our country feels good about it and all of those people have skills and expertise that our military needs."

Should challenges arise, she reminded people that there will be a notice and comment period for people to raise their voices.

"If you think something is going to affect your future you need to reach out. Even if it's a Republican [lawmaker] they need to hear from constituents."
