PNG IMPORTED 160,000 TONNES RICE IN 1996, PAID OUT K130M

by FAY DUEGA

PAPUA New Guinea last year took out a loan worth K50 million from the World Bank at the bank's terms and conditions. Ironically, the country the same year imported 160,000 tonnes of rice, giving away K130 million in the process.

Later this year, the import ban on fresh vegetables is expected to be lifted. This will enable supermarkets to bring in fresh food from overseas, giving away money in the process.

Dr Sergei Bang, the manager/technical support activities at Fresh Produce Development Company (FPDC), Pty Ltd., said that PNG could have easily kept the money in the country if it substituted rice for locally grown crops.

Speaking at last month's market workshop, Dr Bang urged Papua New Guineans to help cut the country's funding deficits by consuming more locally grown food crops in place of those imported. He made the call after presenting the 1990 figures provided by the National Statistical Office, which saw PNG import 87,603 tonnes of wheat flour, sending out a total of K21.8 million; and losing K3.9 million when it imported 4,337 tonnes of fruit juice and jam.

Dr Bang said that with the current situation of markets, which lack a lot of basic needs such as cooling systems, storage facilities etc, the local growers are likely to miss out because they will be competing with overseas growers who have better facilities.

Dr Bang said that PNG can improve the deficit in the balance of payments by either increasing its exports; or by reducing imports through subsition, considering the fact that PNG pays out an estimated K130 million on rice annually.

Dr Bang said that PNG's food production has been estimated to be between K600 to K3,000 million per annum. Most of which remains within the subsistence economy.

He said that about K80-K100 million per annum (60,000 tonnes) enters the 'marketed' food crop sector, most of which are sold in public markets (40,000 tonnes).
