Landmark Settlement in National Lawyers Guild v. FBI

U.S. Concedes It Spied on Guild for 40 Years

[excerpted from Guild Notes]

On October 13, the National Lawyers Guild entered into an unprecedented settlement of its 12-year-old suit against the FBI for political spying and disruption of the organization. The settlement both vindicates the Guild's right to privacy and safeguards the NLG against future harm from the FBI's misuse of its authority and power.

In the settlement, the U.S. government admitted that, prior to 1977, the FBI obtained massive amounts of information on the Guild through burglaries, informant penetration, physical surveillance, wiretaps, trash covers, and the like. Both Guild offices and the law offices of NLG attorneys were targeted. In addition to acknowledging these spying efforts, the government admitted that the FBI undertook efforts to disrupt the Guild and its members' activities.

Moreover, the government stated categorically that it never had a legal basis for any investigation of the organization—and that at no time in the 40 years in which it carried out its campaign of disruption did it act against the Guild because of any "alleged or suspected criminal wrongdoing."

In an unprecedented measure, the government bound itself, under court order, never to use the fruits of its four decades of spying on the Guild in any way. The prohibition extends to every agency of the government, not just the FBI, and is permanent. Any violation of the ban against use of the information would be subject to punishment as contempt of court.

Never before has the government agreed to refrain from using the information generated by an internal security or foreign counter-intelligence investigation. No court has ever ordered comparable relief.

The government also bound itself never to use information on the Guild affiliation or activities of individuals obtained prior to March 1, 1977—even if the information was generated by an investigation of the individual or of a third party, rather than an investigation of the Guild. This represents both a practical and a symbolic admission that NLG membership and activities are irrelevant to any legitimate governmental concern.

The prohibition against use of pre-March 1977 information is coupled with the government's representations that it has not investigated the Guild—nor investigated individuals because of their Guild affiliation or activities—since that date. (Not coincidentally, March 1, 1977, is the date the Guild filed suit against the FBI.) If these representations prove false, the Guild can renew its litigation for the post-March 1, 1977, period.

In yet another unprecedented step, the FBI conceded that it has no information that would justify any renewed investigation of the Guild or any investigation of its members because of their NLG membership or activities. This formal concession will help inhibit the FBI from any future misconduct against the organization.

The settlement contains several provisions to ensure government compliance: The restraints on the government are backed by court order. The FBI files are to be segregated and placed in secure storage under the supervision of the FBI's legal counsel until 2025. The files will then go to the National Archives. And the indexes that would allow a search for references to the Guild in third-party files likewise will be placed out of possible use.

The settlement has been featured prominently in the New York Times, New York Bar Journal and other publications. All coverage seen to date has been extremely positive with respect to the Guild and, equally important, critical of the FBI. The coverage has underlined the FBI's admissions of burglaries, wiretaps, informant penetration, and covert disruption of a legal organization. Although the Reagan and Bush Justice Departments adamantly refused to concede the illegality of government actions in the settlement document, the U.S. Attorney for New York, Benito Romano, acknowledged to the press that the conduct of the FBI "would be considered illegal under current standards."

The Guild started the suit against the FBI in 1977, when public attention was focused on the findings of the U.S. Senate's Church Committee investigations, which had been motivated by the Watergate scandal. In 1976, the Church Committee had issued a report disclosing a broad FBI neutralization program, which entailed thousands of separate covert actions designed to disrupt groups deemed to be "threats to national security and to prevent the propagation of dangerous ideas."

The primary objectives of the NLG suit were to find out what the FBI had been doing to the Guild over the years, and to use that information in a national educational and organizing campaign against government surveillance and disruption. The Guild also was concerned about the government's use of any information obtained through FBI surveillance—and hoped the suit would bring FBI misconduct against the Guild to an end. A number of Guild members and several foundations donated funds to pay initial expenses of the suit. Guild member Michael Krinsky devoted thousands of hours without fee as counsel for the Guild throughout the 12-year litigation.

Despite the government's admissions in this settlement, more broad-based work remains to be done. Even today, there is no federal legislation limiting the powers of the FBI. The government's unwillingness to formally concede the illegality of the admitted burglaries, covert disruption and the like against the Guild dramatically underscores the need for strong legislation setting limits on FBI investigations in the internal security and foreign counter-intelligence fields. The Guild has joined the Committee to Defend the Bill of Rights in its campaign to obtain legislation prohibiting such activities. The government admissions won in this settlement will provide compelling arguments for such legislation.

[ N.I.C. NOTE: Through the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) the New Indicator Collective has learned that virtually every significant student or campus organization at UCSD has at one time or another been "investigated" by the FBI. The list includes the Associated Students Council, the Guardian newspaper, the American Federation of Teachers, the Black Students Union, and many others, including, of course, our own organization. Although we have obtained a partial list of the groups that have been spied upon at UCSD, the FBI is insisting upon pre-payment of very expensive copy fees before they will actually release their files on any of these groups. We have not yet been able to raise the funds or convince the Associated Students to pay for it. For a copy of the list of groups, or more information, please contact our office.]

"National Service" Bill Nears Passage: A Draft By Any Other Name???

"STEP RIGHT UP OR WE'LL HAVE TO FORCE YOU."

Senator Kennedy, chair of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, has thrown his support behind national service legislation. The Kennedy bill is still undergoing final drafting but combines features from several of the national service bills already pending in Congress. Kennedy's bill would fund school-based youth service programs, develop full-time local youth service corps, fund pilot projects whereby "volunteers" would receive vouchers for educational and job training benefits, and expand funding for VISTA and senior service programs.

Meanwhile, the House Committee on Education and Labor is continuing hearings on several national service bills pending before that body. A wide range of organizations for the War Resisters League to the National Lawyers Guild oppose all of these bills, recognizing that they represent the next step towards the reintroduction of military conscription. The first step was to require draft registration, which was reintroduced by President Carter.

The current wave of national service legislation began with the Nunn-

"Welcome to a life of crime!"

McCurdy bill, which would have eliminated all need-based student financial aid and job training programs in order to force young people into the military. Under this proposal, young men and women would have to serve two years of "voluntary" military service in order to qualify for a $20,000 voucher which could be applied towards an education or job training.

The Nunn-McCurdy bill has been stalled in Committee because of its high cost and because of opposition from peace and anti-draft groups. Senator Kennedy is now stepping into the breach, attempting to pass a weaker version which would leave "national service" with the proverbial foot in the door.

ERATUM:

The last issue of New Indicator, Volume 15, Number 5, carried a dateline which read: November 22, 1989-January 2, 1990. It should have been November 22, 1989-December 5, 1989. We regret any confusion this caused, and sincerely hope all you dedicated archivists out there aren't too terribly upset with us.

When You Purchase Domino's Pizza, You're Getting Some Ingredients You Didn't Bargain For.

Socially irresponsible and environmentally unsound development

In March, 1989, Domino's Farms Corp. announced plans to construct a 600-acre exclusive community of 138 homes ("The Settlement"), each costing about $1 million, on the northeast edge of Ann Arbor. The plan also calls for the construction of a golf course with a country club and driving range, membership in which will cost "several times $10,000." Neighbors of "The Settlement" fear possible impact of the proposed on-site sewage treatment plant.

In 1985 Monaghan purchased 1,700 acres of Drummond Island, an 87,000-acre island off the eastern tip of the Upper Peninsula. "Monaghan talked of plans for more—condominiums, marinas, lodges, banks, and golf courses...While he (Monaghan) pledged his support for conservation by stopping his bulldozers from knocking down a tree with nesting woodpeckers, his workers filled in wetlands...Before Tom Monaghan, Drummond Island was known mostly as a place for perch, bear and bobcat." (Ann Arbor News, 6/11/89)

Save Tiger Stadium

Monaghan (owner of the Detroit Tigers) has proposed that the Tigers vacate this historic arena. He wants a new, $117 million stadium built. Much of the bill would be footed by taxpayers of the City of Detroit & State of Michigan.

Attacking Women's Rights

Monaghan donated $100,000 to the referendum ballot committee (Proposal A), "To End Tax-Funded Abortions." The passage of this law banned Medicaid funding and greatly restricted reproductive rights for low and moderate income women in Michigan.

Domino's Farms has hosted numerous fundraisers for Right to Life of Michigan, yet cancelled a National Organization for Women (NOW) fundraiser for pro-choice activities. A Domino's official stated that the cancellation was due to "Mr. Monaghan's religious beliefs against abortion."

NOW has filed a civil rights complaint against Domino's on the basis of religious discrimination. A statement by the Washtenaw County ACLU suggests that although Domino's is a private business, it is nonetheless subject to Section 302 of the Civil Rights Act. This section prohibits a private business which open its facilities to the public, to discriminate on the basis of religion. The ACLU states that Monaghan's $900,000 tax abatement "should result in a greater willingness to comply with the public policies...embodied in the...Civil Rights Act."

Anti-union & Discriminatory Employee Practices

Monaghan stated in the National Catholic Reporter that "unions are the cause of the federal deficit" and that the fear of being "targeted" by unions prevents businessmen from criticizing them. Eight construction trade unions in Granite City, Illinois have initiated a Domino's boycott—with community support—in response to Domino's use of non-union labor in building local outlets.

Since 1986 Monaghan has been subjecting his employees to drug testing. Domino's policy on the matter states: "Domino's Pizza, Inc. reserves the right at all times to have employees or job applicants, while on the premises...submit to an examination for the purposes of determining if such employees or applicants are using any of the prohibited substances of this policy."

In addition, attire worn by all employees at Domino's Headquarters is dictated by Monaghan's dress policy. "Women may not wear slacks, short skirts or tight clothing, and men must wear 'conservative business suits.'"

Monaghan is currently involved in a civil liberties suit filed by a Domino's ex-employee and the ACLU over Domino's employees hair policy.

According to the Michigan Department of Civil Rights, there are four pending complaints against Domino's Pizza: all are based on race.

Support of Right-wing Activities at Home & Abroad

Thomas Monaghan is closely associated with Word of God (WOG), and Ann Arbor-based "Christian" cult which believes that women are "handmaidens of men" and which has "shepherds" who control all aspects of members' lives. There is a significant overlap between the membership of WOG and Washtenaw Rescue, the Operation Rescue extremist anti-abortion group in the Ann Arbor area.

Additionally, several high-level Domino's employees are deeply involved in Operation Rescue and WOG. Peter Tomason, Director of Operations of Domino's Services Corp., is head of his local Operation Rescue chapter. He has spent paid working hours protesting outside of a Planned Parenthood clinic, with the published approval of his boss.

According to Penny Lernoux, writing for The Nation, WOG has ties to the CIA. The WOG affiliate in Nicaragua, called Sword of the Spirit, is headed by Cardinal Obando y Bravo, and works to oppose the Sandinista government. Monaghan is also a member of Knights of Malta, which has funnelled millions of dollars to the Contras.

Monaghan gives significant financial support to Sword of the Spirit activities in Honduras. Regarding this activity, Monaghan claims that he is "more interested in people's souls than their wealth or health..." SOS sponsors such "religious" activities as seminars for military leaders.

What Can We Do?

1. Boycott your local Domino's Pizza outlets and encourage your friends to do the same. Let them know you're doing it. Many outlets are directly owned and operated by Domino's. Franchises give 3-5% of their profits to the Domino's parent company. Some franchise owners are considering putting that money in escrow to show support for the boycott.

2. Write or call Tom Monaghan and tell him why you won't contribute to the profits promoting his right-wing causes. Phone (313) 930-3030; Fax (313) 633-7922. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 30 Frank Lloyd Wright, Ann Arbor, MI 48105.

3. Support boycott educational work with a contribution made payable to: Coalition to Boycott Domino's Pizza, c/o LASC, 4120 Michigan Union, Ann Arbor, MI 48109, (313) 665-8438. Member organizations currently include: National Organization for Women, Latin American Solidarity Committee, Industrial Workers of the World, Homeless Action Committee, Women's International League for Peace & Freedom, Ann Arbor Coalition to Defend Abortion Rights, and the Ann Arbor Tenants Union.

4. Get involved! Get your group to join the Coalition! Call (313) 665-8438 or write the above address for more information. Send $8.50 with your name and address to purchase the Domino's Boycott information packet.

First Prosecution Under Solomon Acts

Solomon Acts, and, most recently, automatic draft registration via financial aid applications. Millions more have failed to comply with legal requirements that they keep Selective Service informed as to their movements, or have notified the government that they refuse to serve is drafted. Thousands of registrants have written the government asking that they be unregistered, as they are no longer willing to make themselves available for the government's war plans.

—Draft Notices

Einstein said:
"The Pioneers of a Warless World are the young men & women who refuse military service"

A nonregistrant in Vermont was recently prosecuted for accepting federal student aid in violation of the Solomon amendments, which require applicants for financial aid (including Guaranteed Student Loans), job training funds or federal employment to certify that they have registered for the draft. (These laws penalize people who have not been indicted, tried or convicted of any crime; and who thus have no opportunity for defense. Non-registration and, to a lesser extent, drug use are the only "crimes" penalized in this manner.) The student had written Selective Service in 1983, notifying the government that his conscience would not allow him to register for the draft.

Although he could have been sentenced to as much as a year in prison and a $100,000 fine, a federal judge instead sentenced him (after a guilty plea to a reduced misdemeanor charge) to 18 months of unsupervised probation. During that time, he will be required to repay the student grants he had received, and to register for the draft.

This was the first prosecution under the Solomon Acts. But the government has reportedly sent letters to other young men suspected of the crime of seeking an education without first registering for the draft. There have been no prosecutions for non-registration itself in the last three-and-a-half years.

Since President Carter reintroduced draft registration in 1980, hundreds of thousands of young men have refused to register, despite criminal prosecutions, expensive advertising campaigns, the
