LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCY: SAN DIEGO POLICE DEPARTMENT

I was driving along 26th street when I turned into the lot of a convenience store. A police car pulled in behind me. The officer asked me for identification. When I couldn't come up with a license, he asked me for 'papers'. After checking the car for registration, he called the border patrol. The car belongs to me to I bought it, the only problem is that the man who sold it to me never changed the name with the proper authorities. I did not committ any crime or there was not any violation in regards to my driving in order for the police to stop and question me. I asked him why he stopped me and never answered. After the policeman called the border patrol I was deported.
