The Bank of Papua New Guinea Announces The 1991... "South Pacific Games" 100 Kina Gold Proof Coin

Beauty, Scarcity, and Very Real Potential For Increasing Value In A Stunning Gold "Sports" Coin...

This year, Papua New Guinea is issuing its first sports coin ever — commemorating the 9th South Pacific Games.

Sports coins are among the most popular commemoratives with collectors around the world. Many issues have increased dramatically in price... such as the 1952 Finland Olympics silver coin that contains less than $1 worth of silver, but now catalogs for up to $400. The mintage of the Finland Olympics coin was 19,000... but only 5,000 of the new Papua New Guinea South Pacific Games coins have been authorized!

Papua New Guinea's "Bird of Paradise" Gold Coins Have a Long Tradition As Strong Performers

Papua New Guinea's gold coins have featured the magnificent native Bird of Paradise for almost 100 years.

Let's compare the first gold "Bird of Paradise" coin with the newest one:

Date	Weight	Fineness	Mintage	Issue Price
1895	7.965 gm.	.900	1,500	$3*
1991	9.570 gm.	.999	5,000	$359

*The current value of the 1895 coin is $10,000! The potential of the 1991 issue is obvious.

Shown larger than actual size. 27 mm • 27 mm • 9.57 gm • 9.57 gm

Why You Should Order Your 1991 "South Pacific Games" Gold Coins Now:

First Sports Coins: While this is not the first time that Papua New Guinea has hosted the South Pacific Games, it is the first time that the Bank of Papua New Guinea has issued a commemorative coin for the event. This is the first sports coin of any kind issued by this country!

Limited Edition — 5,000 Proofs For Worldwide Distribution: Like the 1978 "Golden Butterfly" coin (which has almost tripled in value), the 1991 "South Pacific Games" gold coin will have a tiny authorized mintage of only 5,000 pieces... and a quick sell-out is considered likely.

Unique Seven-Sided Coin: Collectors and investors alike are drawn to unusual or unique coins. And the "South Pacific Games" commemorative certainly qualifies as being unusual. Instead of the standard round shape of virtually all coins, this unique design has seven sides!

Serially Numbered Certificate of Authenticity: Each coin is accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity, which attests to the fact that these are legal tender coins officially authorized by the Bank of Papua New Guinea.

Attractive Designs Struck At The Perth Mint, "Australia's Precious Metal Mint": Coin features prize-winning design by local art student Mira Mira, which combines a stylized Bird of Paradise with the number "9" representing the 9th South Pacific Games. Reverse shows the magnificent Bird of Paradise Coat of Arms depicted on most coins of this country for the past century.

A Genuine Legal Tender Coin — Not A Medallion: Unlike many of the commemoratives now being produced around the world, the 1991 "South Pacific Games" 100 Kina Proof Gold Coin has official legal tender status.

Orders for the 1991 100 Kina Gold Proof coin should be entered on the form at right and mailed directly to the Bank of Papua New Guinea, P.O. Box 121, Port Moresby.

HIRI MOALE

The lagatoi traditions - how it all started

IN THE month of "Lai Lai" (April), any Motuan man could make the decision to build a lagatoi providing he had at least one canoe hull (asi) and at least one arm-shell (toea) as well as a big enough garden to feed his crew while they were building and sailing the lagatoi.

Once a man had made this decision, he would ask his wife for approval and if she agreed, this man, who could then call himself the "badi tauna" (man who originates), would ask a friend to be his "dori tauna" or top man. From then on both men would cease to cohabit with their wives and strive to acquire ritual potency.

In the month of August the captains would choose their crew of up to 30 people and ask them to overhaul and caulk the four canoe dugouts to be used in the lagatoi. Neither captain would take any part in this work but would sit on their mats contemplating the voyage and forging a spiritual bond with their craft. During this time, they drank no water, only coconut milk and the soup from the cooking pots and they did not wash their skins nor comb their hair.

By the month Uria (September), the lagatois would be ready for trial sailings and the youths of the village would board the vessel dressed in their finest clothing with young girls dancing energetically on the bow and men beating bamboo drums called sede (no wooden drums were allowed on the lagatoi).

The badi tauna and the dori tauna would maintain their places on their mats in the irutahuna (Holy Place) at either end of the lagatoi and leave the running of the vessel to the crew.

When everyone was satisfied that the lagatoi was sailing well, it was taken back to the mooring and the captains and their udiha were carried ashore so that the clay pots could be loaded.

On a given day usually between mid September and early November, the lagatois were polled out to deep water with the badi tauna's end of the lagatoi leading the way. When the south easterly winds called "laurabada" hit the sails they were on their way for an adventure of a lifetime.

On a "hiri kwadoge" (short hiri) the destination could be reached in two or three days, but on a "hiri lata" to the north west corner of the Gulf where the best sago grew and trading partners were said to be more generous, the voyage could last a week depending on the strength of the "laurabada" winds.

If all went well, the lagatoi would arrive in the intended village and be greeted by canoes of friendly people. The lagatoi would drop anchor in a sheltered bay and the badi tauna and dori tauna would jump into the sea to wash themselves, then cut their hair and dress in new clothing.

The senior trading partner would then come out to the lagatoi and after much embracing, he would be asked "Do you have pigs? If you have pigs, you can have my lagatoi". If he said yes, he would then receive the ceremonial toea armshells.

This man would then go back to his village to kill pigs and dogs and these were paddled out to the lagatoi to be eaten.

During the following week, the clay pots (uro) were unloaded from the lagatoi and displayed on the beach while the captain and crew negotiated with their trading partners. Each pot had two tally sticks in them called "kahi" and the Motuan men would keep one and give the other to his trading partner. Each pot was later exchanged for either one 20 kilogram bundle of sago known as vai or 10 sticks of roasted sago known as dikea. Big pots could earn more.

Meanwhile the crew battered "toea" armshells for canoe logs. A Motuan would give one armshell to a villager who would then go into the bush to measure the circumference of a tree. If the measurement was satisfactory, the tree would be felled and floated out to the lagatoi. Armshells and pig tusk (doa) ornaments as well as Koiari stone axes, strings of ageva shells and dog teeth necklace (dodoma) were also negotiated. One large toea could "buy" to page 4

How the Motuans learned to make the lagatoi

THERE was once a Motuan man called Edai Siapo from Boera village who went on a fishing expedition to Idiha Island where an eel spirit, called "Dirava" pulled him into the water and took him down into a rock cavern. When Edai's friends realised what had happened, they dived down into the water to try to recover his body. One of the men saw Edai's feet poking out from the cave but when they tried to pull him out, they couldn't.

Some time later, Edai came out of the water and told his friends that the spirit had kept him in the cave while it taught him how to build an ocean going canoe called "lagatoi" that would take him to Gulf of Papua where he could trade for sago. Edai also told them of the many songs and rituals that would have to be carried out if the voyage was to be successful.

Edai then went back to his village and built a toy lagatoi according to the instruction he had been given. Once he had learned how it should be done, he asked his friends to help him build a full scale ship. Eventually they set sail with their cargo of clay pots and ornaments as well as food supplied by his sister "Boio" who had married a Koita man called Bokina.

Edai and his crew were away for so long that many of the wives thought their men had died so they married again. Edai's wife did not worry. She did all the things her husband had told her to do and eventually the lagatoi did come back. When the other Motuans saw how much sago and betelnut and how many new canoe logs Edai had, they all wanted to know the secrets of building and sailing a lagatoi.

Choosing the Queen

A MAJOR event in every Hiri Moale Festival is the choosing of the Hiri Hanenamo from amongst the Motu Koita entrants.

It is not a beauty competition. The event is judged on ancient Motu Koita traditions that holds that a woman is desirable because of her poise and deportment in the dance, as well as the tattoos, ornaments and traditional clothing that enhance her natural poise.

During this competition, the girls are asked to dance before the audience as well as to be interviewed by the judges where marks are given for knowledge and love of their ancient culture.

Judges first choose a winner from every village represented in the competition.

These girls are called "hiri hane ulato". The judges then choose one of these village winners to be Hiri Hanenamo and she is the girl who will represent the Motu Koita people both in Port Moresby and overseas during the next year.

□ 1989 Hiri Hanenamo runner up with other contestants.

Motu Koita Calendar

THE MOTU Koita year consisted of thirteen months that would be identified by the weather and therefore directed the activities of the village. The "western" name for these "months" is therefore only an approximation.

Veadī - June, July

Men secretly began making big fishing nets called matagara with meshes 20 - 30 cms in diameter. People began to clear land for new gardens.

Veadī Haro - July

"Hiri Lata" expeditions set sail for the Gulf of Papua. Women tending the gardens. Young girls being tattooed.

Laga - October

The hunting month when wallabies caught in nets laid across the land after fires and beaters stirred them from their slumbers.

Days very hot and flies and ants everywhere. Yams planted. Tattooing continues. "Vili" traders arrived from Hula.

Manumaura - November

First rains of the lahara (wet season). Last of the small lagatois leave for Mekeo area.

Biri Bada - January

Hot winds constantly changing direction from the land (mirigini) to the sea (atudiho). Fastest lagatois return from the Hiri.

Many wrecked by the treacherous atudiho. Hula people sail home.

Gairaura - February

Month of big storms that blew down trees and houses. Much rain. More lagatois returned.

Goha - March

Time when darkness "passed away" and lahara (North West) winds finished. Time of bright moons.

Lailai - April

Laurabada winds from the south east start to blow. First laurabada bring bona dika (bad smell). Gardens look as though they will die. Second laurabada brings bona namo (good smell) makes plants start to grow again.

Men who plan to hold a feast or go on a "hiri", look at their gardens and decide if there will be enough food to support the rituals.

Rehearsals for dancing begin.

Darodaro - May

Strong winds blow dead leaves from the garden so that the harvesting of yams can begin.

The dancing season starts.

Divaro - June

Harvesting of yams continues. Dancing season continues.

How Motu Koita land became PNG's capital

IN 1872 the London Missionary Society established a United Church mission manned by several Samoan pastors and their families at Manu Manu village on Redscar Bay west of Port Moresby.

Unfortunately these missionaries had few provisions and had become very ill before Captain John Moresby, on the British naval vessel HMS Basilisk, heard of their plight while with a group surveying the Torres Strait islands.

Captain Moresby went to Manu Manu to give the missionaries provisions but while there, he and his navigating lieutenant, Mourilyan, went off in the ship's boats to explore the area.

During the following weeks, he and his men found a large deep water harbour that he named Moresby Harbour while naming the gap in the reef across the harbour entrance, Basilisk Passage.

Captain Moresby was so impressed with the country he saw and the friendly people he met, his report persuaded the London Missionary Society to relocate their mission on the hills above the five villages we now call Hanuabada (Big Village) on the shores of Moresby Harbour.

Several years later, in 1884, the British Crown agreed to annex the south eastern section of the great island of New Guinea and chose Moresby as its administrative centre.

After World War II when the Australian government, who had been given the job of looking after the Papuan colony in 1906 and had also been administering the former German colony of New Guinea since 1919, decided to administer both colonies together. In doing so, they chose Port Moresby as the new headquarters.

Since Independence day on September 16, 1975, Port Moresby has been the national capital of Papua New Guinea.

The Motu Koita villages

MOTU people living to the west of Port Moresby have always built their homes in sheltered bays in lines extending out over the sea.

Each line of houses belongs to a family group who can trace their ancestry back to a single man. Sometimes there are two or three lines of houses belonging to the same group known as an "iduhu", who share the clan insignia and the leader of each iduhu lives in the house nearest to the shore.

In Motu villages to the east of Port Moresby, the houses face the open sea so they are built above high water mark. However, all Motuan village houses were built of bush timbers and either kunai grass or nipa palm thatch constructed on long timber poles.

Each typical Motuan house has a single room and a veranda in front where minor ceremonies can be performed. Outside the home of the iduhu leader however was the special platform where village elders could sit and chew betel nut and where all major ceremonies were conducted.

The Koita by contrast generally built their thatched homes on the tops or saddles of hills overlooking the sea while the Koiari people, who lived even further inland, built their homes in the tops of trees to be less vulnerable from attack by enemies.

Leadership of an iduhu passed from father to son but the affairs of the clan were presided over by a group of elders who held the secret powers of their ancestors and knew the ancient customs.

□ Koiari tree house - Central province 1880's.

Why the Motuans have no sago

ACCORDING to Motuan traditions, sago once grew in Port Moresby but it all belonged to two hills called Taurama and Kiauru. Unfortunately these two hills had an argument after Taurama accused Kiauru of making his well dirty.

During the battle that followed, Kiauru smashed all Taurama's sago palms leaving great holes all over Taurama's hill but eventually Taurama was triumphant and he chased Kiauru away.

Kiauru took off flying westward, but the soil was so heavy, he kept dropping it into the sea forming the islands we now know as Manubada, Daugo, Bava, Idiha, Lagava, Varivari and Yule.

Kiauru was too frightened to stay on Yule, so he continued westward until he got to the Gulf of Papua where he has lived ever since. All he had left however were the sago palms and these he planted along the coast where they have flourished ever since.

Meanwhile, Taurama was not very happy because all his sago palms had been destroyed and he knew his family would be hungry during the months of Biria Biria (January) and Guiraurua (February) when there was nothing in the gardens to eat except the roots of the banana palms and the prints of the mangoes.

Today you can go to Taurama Beach and see the hole in the ground where Kiauru once lived and marvel at the club marks he made on Taurama's Hill that we now call Pyramid Point.

Who are the Motu - Koita people?

THE MOTU - Koita people are the traditional owners of the land on which Port Moresby now stands.

Originally they were two distinct tribes with the "Motu" speaking an Austronesian language with similarities to language spoken through the Pacific, while the "Koita" people spoke a language similar to that spoken by the people in the Owen Stanley Ranges.

Whether the Motu or the Koita people were the first to settle in the Port Moresby area is a hotly debated point but in 1873, when the first white explorer arrived, there were Motu speakers living in villages of Manu Manu, Lea Lea, Boera, Porebada < Tatana, Hanuabada (Elevala, Poreporena, Tanobada), Vabukori Pari, Tubuseria, Barakau, Gaire and Kapa Kapa.

The Koita people lived at Gorohu, Kido, Papa Kouderika, Hohodae, Guriu (the last two part of Hanuabada) as well as inland Baruni, Kila Kila, Kourabad (Three Mile Hill) and Akoroga (Kaugere).

Traditionally the Motu were seafaring people with their traditional wealth coming from fishing and trading the clay pots made by the women.

By contrast, the Koita people were great hunters and agriculturalists so the Motu and the Koita co-existed by trading with each other for everything that was needed.

Over the years since the coming of the white man the customs and cultures of the Motu and Koita people have merged so as to be indistinguishable from one another and all are usually referred to as simply "Motu - Koita" people.

The modern language used by the Motu - Koita people and also by most people living along the south coast of Papua New Guinea is an adaptation of the Motu language.

This lingua franca was originally known as "Police Motu" but is now called "Hiri Motu".

The lagatoi traditions

up to 170 kilogram of sago made up of 6 - 16 "vai" bundles and called a goru goru.

Every night while these negotiations were going on, the Motuans would live under a shelter on the lagatoi made by tying a spar between the masts and constructing a thatched roof over this ridge pole. On shore, the Gulf women and girls would dance and sing but their men would take no part.

When the canoe trees arrived, the Motuans would spend their days hollowing out the trunks, singing to them and telling them of the work they would do in the future. When this was finished, the four hulled lagatoi was dismantled and rebuilt to accommodate the new hulls. The largest known lagatoi on a return voyage had fourteen hulls making it almost as wide as it was long.

While this was happening, the laurabada winds would cease to blow and the doldrums would be upon them. It was then time for the trading partners to go into the bush to cut sago while the Motu-ans built huts on the shore where they could live.

After a month while the lahara winds were beginning to blow from the north-west, the trading partners returned with sago. The tally sticks were brought out and exchanged for the sago. The sago was then loaded onto the lagatoi along with much other produce including betelnut.

It was then time for departure, so the trading partners made a great feast before the lagatoi floated off on the high tides of biria bada and set sail for home.

This was the most dangerous time of all. The enlarged lagatois were very hard to manage and the sago cargo weighed up to 34 tonnes, but worst of all, the "lahara" winds were unpredictable and treacherous. Many lagatois were wrecked on the return voyage and many men were never heard of again.

However, if all went well, the lagatois would eventually be sighted by Koita people of Kido village west of Moresby and they would blow the conch shells to send word to the appropriate Motuan village that their lagatoi was returning.

The badi tauna's wife who had been living like a widow while her husband was away, never talking to anyone except the dori tauna's wife, never washing or combing her hair, observing food tabus, keeping watch over her fire and tying knots in a cord hanging from the house rafter to mark the normal 50 days of the Hiri, would run from her house when she heard the news and hit the verandah post with a stick shouting "Hedihoto O-O-O, Hedihoroa..... the lagatoi is back". This triggered off a whirl of excitement in the village. Other women would come running and dragging the wives of the captains down to the sea, pushing their heads under water as they danced and shouted. Coconut oil was then rubbed into their skins, their hair was cut before they were dressed in new grass skirts and were adorned with "toea" and perfumed leaves.

Meanwhile others prepared a feast for the returning lagatoi.

On board the lagatoi, similar things were happening to the captains. The crew would go to the irutahuna (the holy mats where the captains had sat during the voyage) and drag them out and loss them overboard. The crew would push them underwater and make them hang onto the paddles shouting "Now it is time for you to do some work".

They were then taken back on board and given sago to eat while they dropped anchor and allowed everyone to dress in their finest clothes ready for the homecoming. It was a time of joy and sadness for the badi tauna as he told his lagatoi that they were nearly home and he called on the home spirits to accept them back.

Next day the lagatoi was surrounded by a flotilla of canoes as it neared the village. Among them were the captains wives who were thrown a bundle of sago that they immediately took home to cook.

When the lagatoi finally reached the village, there was great feasting and dancing and many presentations of sago to the many people who had helped with the successful voyage.

Sago bundles had to be given to those who had made pots as well as the families who had looked after the women who were left behind. Much sago had to be given to the Koita people who had supplied food especially cycad flour during the construction of the lagatoi as well as on the westward voyage. Other sago bundles were given to the Hula people who had supplied the Mailu armshells. The badi tauna and the dori tauna kept little sago for themselves but relied on food from friends as well as the sago cargo that would be brought in by Gulf people on the last of the lahara winds to keep them alive until their new yams were harvested in Daro Daro (May).
