Editor
GUARDIAN
B-016

Dear Editor,

We on the Associated Students Council of UCSD would like to express our discontent with and disapproval of the article "Accept Me For What I am... Dont Reject Me For What I Am Not," written by Stephonie Krieger and printed in the October 22nd issue of The Guardian

We feel that the editors of The Guardian, in choosing to print an article depicting a negative image of a particular subculture, showed poor editorial judgement and a lack of social responsibility. The author chose as a subject a minority group that has historically suffered grave oppression as well as ostracism; the result was not to raise an "interesting" issue, but rather to perpetuate an untrue and negative stereotype. We believe that the press has a responsibility to present all views. However, presenting information which perpetuates stereotypes reinforces ignorance, stifles social awareness, and hinders the acceptance of society for all its members.

We consider the printing of this article an injustice to the social consciences of the students at UCSD and would hope that in the future the editorial staff of The Guardian, realizing the power they possess in being a prominent media on the campus of UCSD, would be consciously aware of the effects of their newspaper and its contents. Also, we feel that in order to compensate for the lack of a more accurate image, The Guardian should contact "the other side of the story," and give them comparable space for an article. By making this effort, The Guardian shall be able to offer a less biased presentation and to reinstate our faith in the most widely circulated paper on the UCSD campus.

Thank you,
