

UCSD is struck by a peak in dividing events from time to time. The campus is usually calm socially, ethnically and politically speaking. Some events rushes students into a short period of very tensed climate after discriminating events occur. More recently, the election of the candidate Donald Trump and, a few days before that, the oppressive chalk writing directed towards immigrants and minorities created a movement of protests and chalk responses with peace messages. Overall, Kong's text helped me realize that the campus's climate is very calm socially, ethnically and politically speaking. But some racially dividing events cause tension between the students. This is not because there is a lack of minority policies but because of prejudiced individuals that lack education on how to go beyond stereotypes.
