

Sam Kernell to lecture

October 23, 1980

A political scientist who is an expert on the presidency will offer his views of the elections in the second "Adventures in Research" lecture at the University of California, San Diego on Wednesday, November 5, the day after election day.

Professor Sam Kernell, chairman of the political science department, will speak at noon in the North Conference Room of the Student Center on "What Happened Last Night: A Morning-after Look at the Elections." The public is invited and admission is free.

Kernell, who earned his doctorate in political science at UC Berkeley and joined the San Diego faculty in 1977, has written extensively about the presidency and congress.

He has co-authored a book with UC San Diego political scientist Gary Jacobsen, "The Structure of Choice: A Theory of Congressional Elections," recently accepted for publication by Yale Press.

The "Adventures in Research" series of lectures, sponsored by the Council of Provosts, Third College and the Public Information Office, is designed to better acquaint the campus community and the general public with some of the UC San Diego faculty and their research.

The final lecture in the Fall quarter series will be November 26 at noon in the UCSD Theatre where drama professor Eric Christmas will discuss and perform "Christmas in November: A Lighthearted Look at Holiday Entertainment Through the Centuries."

For more information contact: Paul Lowenberg, 452-3120

(October 23, 1980)