old Spanish lighthouse and continue our way by the Theosophical Society to Sunset Cliffs. Here we are impressed by the rugged coast line and high breakers. On to Ocean Beach we go; a short stop and we re-enter the outskirts of the city and pass on to Ramona's Marriage Place. Here we stop to view the scenes of this romantic place and to purchase curios or maybe to make our wish at the old wishing well. Leaving here we enter San Diego's most pretentious residence district—Mission Hills—and then to pretty Mission Cliff Gardens. Here we stop to view its scenic grandeur and return to our starting place by way of Balboa Park, third largest in America. Time of trip four hours, starting time 9:00 a. m. Price $1.75.

The Pine Hills Loop

Trip Par Excellence

PINE Hills Lodge, one of the county's prettiest mountain resorts, is located 68 miles east of San Diego in the Cuyamaca mountains. Leaving Third and Plaza the big Safety Coach passes through the business district to winding Pershing Drive, thence to the village of La Mesa and on to the bounteous grape country surrounding El Cajon. Traveling through miles of bearing vineyards, we continue on the paved Imperial Valley highway to the base of the picturesque Cuyamaca range. Here we branch off of the beaten paths and start our climb of forty miles over perfect granite roads to the very summit, through clouds, mile high to San Diego's most scenic mountain resort, Pine Hills Lodge. Enroute we skirt the edges of Lake Cuyamaca, truly a fisherman's paradise with its rainbow and steelhead trout filled waters while on its edges and now water-filled by the lake, is the famous old Stonewall gold mine, where three million dollars in gold was removed during the gold rush of '49. On we go climbing through gigantic pine trees past other mines now in operation to the very edge of the mountains where we pause for a glimpse of the barren desert, reaching away in its sandy wastes to the Salton Sea 45 miles distant, yet quite plainly visible. Continuing on our way we enter the famous old mining town of Julian, now however, given over to the production of the nationally famous Julian apples and here starts the last lap of our climb to beautiful Pine Hills. On arriving we take deep breaths of the invigorating mountain air, perfumed with the fragrance of pine needles and wild lilac and wonder if really in all the world there is another spot like this. Glancing around us we see pretty little double log cottages nestling 'neath the pines, rustic yet modern in every respect; above us we are surprised to see houses built in the trees, cozy and unique, while just ahead is the Big Lodge itself. We rush over nature's playground in rapture until summoned into the big dining room to satisfy our barefoot boy appetites on a bounteous, yet daintily prepared, meal of fresh, wholesome food. After lunch some will run to the swimming pool, some to the tennis courts, or maybe some will dance. Others will want to get out into the pines again, those giants whose branches seem to touch the very heavens, possibly some will not be satisfied to merely walk beneath the trees with their velvety carpet of needles, but will want a saddle-pony whereby they can cover more of the picturesque bridle paths—who knows just what will appeal most to each individual. Finally with regret we learn it is time to wend our way homeward. Then we realize that we still have a treat in store for us in the nature of beautiful views, unsurpassed in their immensity and scope of country. Broad, fertile valleys stretching away in vast panorama from the base of rugged rock cliffs thousands of feet directly beneath us. Going on through cattle ranches we wonder what now could be of interest and we are in Ramona, that pretty little back-country village given over to poultry farming. We see thousands and tens of thousands of chickens, but we can't tarry long so reluctantly pass on over the winding San Pasqual grade to the famous old battlefield. Here

The Tijuana Trip

THE Sunny Southland of California offers the tourist no more unique and entertaining one-day trip than that—to far-famed Tijuana, Mexico.

Inherent in each one of us is the interest in foreign places—in quaint peoples and customs, amid old-world settings in far climes. This little Mexican town furnishes the Spanish atmosphere so distinguishing this part of Southern California. Within the day's journey one is transported from the bustling center of a modern city to the drowsy quietude of a foreign village, with its differing people, customs and environment.

Sixteen miles from San Diego is the dividing line between the United States of America and Old Mexico—notably marked by the large International Mounment of granite, properly inscribed. Crossing the river bridge to "Old Town," Tijuana, interesting sights and characters greet the eye. Varied assortments of Mexican curios, filigree jewelry, drawn-work, cigars, Indian pottery, rugs, blankets, etc., are enticingly displayed for sale in native shops. Picture post-cards, illustrative of these quaint people and scenes, can be written upon and there mailed to the "home folks", reminiscent alike of their foreign purchase and the unusual outing taken.

Genuine Spanish dinners, comprising those viands typical of the land and people are served the hungry traveler, at fair remuneration. The day's pleasure (spent at this point in Mexico) is further enhanced by the smoothly-paved highway leading thereto—through some of the beautiful back-country contiguous to San Diego—and the excellent mode of travel furnished the tourist by our Fageol Safety Coaches, 26 passenger compartment cars. The only stage line between San Diego and Tijuana, Mexico; our cars leave 922 Third street every few minutes.

To the Tourist with Your Own Means of Transportation

you will find the roads to Pine Hills Lodge well posted to guide you. You may expect pavement over half of the way with the very best of gravel roads for most of the remainder while the dirt roads are only of five or six miles altogether and are kept in the best of shape. Pine Hills will please you—your stay will be pleasant and you may return an entirely different road with equally beautiful scenery on both the outgoing and return trip. We suggest that you go via University Ave. to La Mesa thence on out the paved highway where the guide cards will take you on through El Cajon, Alpine, Cuyamaca Lake, Julian and to the Lodge—returning by way of Ramona, Escondido and Old Town.
