Berkeley Students Form the First Pro-Sweatshop Alliance In Country

BERKELEY — In an unprecedented move, 50 Berkeley students have created the first pro-sweatshop student group. The Organization for the Protection of Economic Rights was started by six Berkeley seniors, all economics majors, who say they are disgusted with the proliferation of antisweatshop groups on campus and believe that students are being used by American labor unions to increase U.S. apparel tariffs. OPER plans to stage a protest next Wednesday at Sproul Hall.

All-Campus Commencement Canceled

Maya Angelou turns down UCSD for offer from UC Riverside

By BLANCA MENTIROSA

Senior Staff Writer

This year's all-campus graduation ceremony was canceled last week following an announcement from Maya Angelou that she has been presented with a "more favorable speaking engagement."

Angelou, who was scheduled to be the keynote speaker for UCSD's fourth all-campus commencement on June 17, will instead be speaking at UC Riverside.

In a letter of apology to Chancellor Dynes, Angelou listed her reasons for not speaking at UCSD.

"Not only will I be speaking to a more diverse and unified group of students at UC Riverside, but the university has offered me more money.

Vice Chancellor James Langley said that the amount offered to Angelou by UC Riverside was a mere $100 more than the $25,000 that UCSD was going to pay her for

"I'm appalled that Angelou would cancel on such short notice," he said. "And Riverside? The embarrassment of the UC system? You'd have to pay me a whole lot more than 25 grand to speak there.'

Dynes said he is currently searching for another speaker, but is pes-simistic about finding a replacement.

"There is little chance of the university attracting such a high-caliber speaker in such a short amount of time," he said. "We may be forced to fall back on Irwin [Jacobs] ... again."

Scientists Identify Rhythm Gene in Mice

By BRENT RATONCITO

Senior Staff Writer

Researchers in UCSD's bloeng neering department announced yesterday that they have finally iso-lated the long sought-after "rhythm gene." The announcement came after researchers successfully engi-neered mice with an impeccable sense of timing, hot dance moves and increased flexibility.

"This is a ground-breaking discovery," said biology Professor Stu Little, who headed the research project. "While we're currently limited to breeding funky mice, there's no reason to expect that there will be any major difficulties in applying the benefits of this discovery to humans. We have taken the first important step toward eradicating rhythm deficiency in the world."

The mice engineered by the project appear normal in every respect, except when exposed to music. Then they bust out on the dance floor and come into their own.

research Ralph Esse summarized the phenomenon: "These are mega-fly and super-bad. They've got more soul than James Brown.

Others are skeptical of the dis-covery. SDSU biology Professor Stan Darownd cautioned against jumping to any conclusions.

There's significant evidence suggesting that there is no single rhythm gene. We have every reason to believe that there are actually several different genes that govern dancing. These mice may dance fine to house, but what about Latin grooves? Can they salsa? Does this research team actually think that just because these mice can bug out to some top 40 garbage that they're going to be able to slam dance?"

Pope Apologizes for Hyperevangelical Christians

Head of the Catholic church begs forgiveness for Michael and others who force religion

By MARY MAGDELINO

Staff Writer

In a continuing series of apologies, Pope John Paul II apologized yesterday for the sins of Warren senior Michael Carley and other hyperevangelical Christians.

"The church is sorry that some Christians have resorted to this type of evangelism," the pope said during his weekly homily from the Vatican. "We must not allow fellow Christians such as Michael Carley to parade around college campuses forcing our religion upon others."

Wearing a robe that read "I do not agree with Michael," the pope said that Christians should promote an atmosphere of peace and tolerance, especially on college campuses, where they might not always be accepted.

Carley, who was the center of last quarter's "Do you agree with Michael?" campaign, lashed out at the pope's statements late last night at a Campus Crusade for Christ rally in the Price Center.

"I'm sorry that the pope feels that way about me," he said. "Unfortunately, I believe that he too will end up in hell. The only way to heaven is through me and my cult, um ... I mean religion. Anyone who disagrees with me will undoubtedly burn in eternal

Jacobs, founder and owner of Qualcomm, spoke in front of a "stellar" crowd of 700 at last year's allcampus commencement, which was nearly canceled.

A list of speakers compiled earlier in the year is being reconsidered. At the top of that list is actor and comedian Bill Cosby. The university was unable to secure Cosby as a speaker earlier because of the actor's ridiculous $150,000 speaking fee.
A.S President Tesh Khullar said he too is devoted to finding a new speaker and keeping all-campus commencement alive.

"I won't hesitate to bend over backward, or forward, to ensure that all-campus commencement happens for graduating seniors," Khullar said. Khullar added jokingly that he would sell his body to raise the additional funds needed to secure a speaker such as Cosby.

"There are plenty of men ... I mean women ... who have ... I mean would . pay to sleep with me," Khullar said. A.S. Vice President Internal Jennifer Lee scoffed at the notion: "Have you seen Tesh naked?"

Eric Rovner, A.S. vice president finance, also did not think Khullar's proposal was fiscally sound, saying that he too had unfortunately seen Khullar in his birthday suit but would not specify on what terms.

The five college provosts, Tom Bond, David Jordan, Ann Craig, Cecil Lytle and Pat Ledden, were seen getting sloshed at the Faculty Club.

In a drunken slur, Bond muttered. "There is no reason to have an allcommencement when there are college commencements ... burp who wants to attend two graduations anyway? I was always strongly opposed to the idea of the all-campus com-mencement. Pass me another Lucky Lager, Cece. This is a day of celebration for the university. What's up with that weird muppet photo? The DJ and Vinylphiles club is already planning the event. According to members of the club, Movement 2001 will feature over a dozen DJs from around the country. While the Price Center Plaza could only accommodate 5,000 attendees, Dynes' residence will accommodate nearly double that amount.

Environmentalists Deem Muir Quarterly a Waste of Paper

Environmentalists from the Environmental Protection Agency have asked Chancellor Dynes to revoke funding from the Muir Quarterly, stating that "the paper used by the Muir Quarterly could be put to greater use as rectal wipes."

After reviewing the damage caused to the environment, the EPA reported that the Muir Quarterly is the greatest environmental tragedy since the Exxon-Valdez oil spill.

Researchers spent less than an hour reading and discussing the publication before arriving at the conclusion that the paper is downright bor-

UCSD Offers Free Penile Implants for Future Study

Dean David Schlong Bailey of the UCSD Medical School has introduced a new study that will be undertaken this month. Fifteen volunteers are needed for a penile implant clinical trial. The implant is theorized to add 12 inches to any average-size penis.

The Women's Center is protesting the study due its discrimination against women.

"We strongly abhor the nature of this study despite the pleasure it could bring millions of women around the world," the women's center director said. "It is a clear example of sexual discrimination because women are not included in this study. Any woman who desires a penile implant deserves

Chancellor Robert Dynes, however, said that the trial must go on.

So You've Decided To Kill Your Roommate

Go ahead. You know you want to

By D. KEVORKIAN

Professional Euthanasiast and Florist

All of us have heard of the Roommate Provision: If your roommate dies, the normally heartless bastards in the administration take pity on you and give you A's for all your classes for the quarter. This is not an urban legend. It is entirely true. People who get straight A's without the use of this provision are an urban legend.

The benefits of this situation are numerous. First of all, you get the 4.00 without having to put in any effort, regardless of more space to yourself, at least until they find you a new roommate, which brings us to the third point: This system is completely open-ended. If the university keeps giving you new roommates and they keep dying, you keep getting straight A's. Dead roommates aren't retroactive, so if you get two dead roommates during one quarter you basically get the shaft. There are some minor ethical and psychological disadvantages to having your roommate die, but nothing that's really worth mentioning

> Unfortunately roommates rarely die on their own. Sometimes they need a little help.

Now I'm not saying that you should murder your roommate, because that would be illegal and you wouldn't qualify for your free A's. But your roommate definitely has to die somehow, and it's about time you were a little more proactive about it. Murder is just one of your many options.

The easiest method is to drive your roommate to suicide.

This makes it fairly difficult for the authorities to implicate you in any way (which, you'll remember, is bad) but it also takes the gest time and the most amount of effort.

First of all, you need to find an angle, some weakness of your roommate that you can exploit in order to drive him over the edge. Fortunately you have ready access to this kind of information, being that you live with your roommate. Observe him and notice what seems to depress him. Does he experience an inordinate amount of stress over his schoolwork? Does he sob uncontrollably at the mention of name of a member of the opposite sex? Does he have an alcohol problem?

Can you coax him into developing one?
Once you've identified his problem, all you have to do is to aggravate the situation any way you can and to constantly remind him about it. Keep him away from psychiatric help or your past performance in your classes. If your roommate bumps off early you can take the rest of the quarter off and party. Secondly, your roommate will be gone and you'll have

> If you have a shorter amount of time (for example, if you realize that your midterm scores aren't going to quite cut it), you can always try poisoning him. This is a little bit more dangerous than the suicide approach, but has a better guarantee of results. Slip a little bit of biological contagion or radioactive material into your roommate's food everyday. Make sure it's just a little bit, because if he goes from being healthy one day to being dead the next, people might get suspicious. Once he starts to develop symptoms of being sick, act con-cerned and tell him he should really see a doctor. Before he actually has a chance to do this, deliver a lethal dose, kick back and hock your textbooks for beer money

The final, quickest method — which should be reserved for finals week when you realize there's no way in hell you're going to pass your classes — is to kill your roommate and make it look like an accident. This is a lot trickier and has a her risk than the other methods, but sometimes it is the

There are lots of ways to do this. Get him drunk and stick him in his car to sleep it off. Turn the oven gas on one night and slip out for the evening. Casually trip him while standing

Killing your roomie will only stink up the place

By CASUAL BODY PIERCINGS

If your roommate is like mine, his most redeeming value is the fact that he gives you cheese. Think about that. If you killed him, he wouldn't give you any more cheese. What would you live on? Well, I suppose you could chop your roommate up and eat him, but your roommate's a lot bigger than a piece of cheese. You and your pet monkey together couldn't finish your roommate by making his pathetic life a miserably painful one?

in a month. The corpse would start to smell and grow mold, and insects would start to collect on the body. Monkeys like bugs. But that's because they're monkeys. That's why Ed down the hall collects butterflies. He's a monkey in

Anyway, what would you do with our roommate's corpse? It would just sit there, stinking up your suite, grinning ical school, but approximately 93 percent of UCSD students are pre-med, and you wouldn't want just anyone parts of his skeleton here and there, but he won't be sliprecognizing your roommate's distinctive tattoo, would you? Imagine the humiliation!

In my opinion, the best way to get an A in a class is to slee — er, study — with your gorgeous TA. Another good way is to befriend a physics major and periodically have him microscopically tattoo your notes onto the insides of your eyelids with a laser.

Some of you are saying, "The grade itself doesn't really matter to me. It's the roommate-killing that I find

To these people, wouldn't it be infinitely more satisfying to torture your roommate rather than merely killing him outright? He steals your food from the fridge, swallows your pet goldfish and jumps on his bed naked while you try to sleep. Why not pay him back for these atrocities, not by killing him and getting it over with quickly, but

Your first step is to catch him. I know this is incredibly difficult as he puts exactly 75 gallons of hair gel on every norning and it drips down throughout he day, greasing him up like a fat pig. His hygiene is especially complicated by the fact that he only showers on Feb. 29.

So first, get a bucket of hydrochloric acid and dump it on him while he sleeps. He will jump up, probably not even con-cerned that you have a bucket in your annoyingly at your friends when they walk in. You could hide it among the cadavers at the medhands that smells suspiciously of hydrochloric acid, and

With proper medical attention (i.e.: more hydrochloric acid), he should live for a little while longer. At this point, you must act quickly. Grab him and put him in your mon-

I know what you're thinking: What will I do with the monkey? The answer here is simple: The monkey will attend your roommate's classes and impersonate him. He can go home over vacations and supply you with cheese.

You will be free to torment your roommate by burning him, poking him with a spork and drinking all his liquor while the monkey stands in for him. And the best part is: No one will ever know the difMonday, April 1, 2000

Asshole Should be an Olympic Sport

With the Olympics right around the corner, I think it is time for the International Olympic Committee to give consideration to a sport whose time has come: the drinking game Asshole.

If it were up to me, Asshole would have been an Olympic event a long time ago. There is nothing that this sport doesn't have. It offers the drama of a last second buzzer-beater combined with the excitement of a kickoff return for a touchdown.

For those who have not yet been introduced to the game of Asshole (those of you who have been hiding in caves your entire college careers) I will give you the executive overview.

All the cards are passed out and the person with the three of clubs starts. The next player must beat the three and the player after that must beat the card that was previously played. If you cannot beat what was put down in front of you, you must pass and drink. If a card goes all the way around the table, the stack of cards is cleared and the person who played the last card leads the next card (or pair or three of a kind, depending on their preference). A two automatically wipes the stack and is the most powerful card in the game. The first person to play all of his or her cards is president, the second is vice-president and so on all the way down to the last person being the asshole. Because everybody above you in rank can make you drink in subsequent rounds, being the asshole is not an ideal position.

Now many of you might be thinking, "This sounds like a fun game, but why should it be considered for the Olympics?" Good question Asshole athletes must have amazing endurance and an incredible ability to absorb pain.

The endurance comes from two areas. First of all, the game usually lasts a great while. Any normal human being would be to the foor after one or two rounds, but world class Asshole athletes can go on for hours, if not days, while still maintaining some degree of cognition in their inebriated state.

The second need for endurance comes from a presidential decree called a waterfall. Whenever the president so chooses, he or she can start a waterfall and begin drinking. The vice president can not stop until the president does, the secretary cannot stop until the vice president does and so on. The asshole cannot stop until everyone else is done. Without incredible endurance, the asshole could be out of breath and dead before the game is even 10 minutes old.

Pain comes from all sorts of unforeseen areas. Obviously drinking for three minutes straight can be extraordinarily painful, but there is also pain in unexpected places. Once, when we made up a rule that nobody yould use first names, the punishment was running across the

UCSD to Hire Bill Parcells

Superbowl winning coach to head UCSD's upstart football team in inaugural 2000-2001 season

David Pilz/Guardian

Growll: Parcells may have a big mouth and a bigger gut but he is also our generation's version of Vince Lombardi. With his help, the UCSD football team should thrive well into the third millennium.

By BILL BURGER

Sports Editor

For those of you who have complained about UCSD's lack of an NCAA football team, your time has come. On April 1, the UCSD athletics department secured funding for the upstart program and signed former New York Giants, New England Patriots and New York Jets head coach Bill Parcells to head the team.

"I am really looking forward to the opportunity to work at the college level," Parcells said. "This is a great chance to put my system to work in a new program with some kids who haven't been tainted by any other coach's ideas."

Parcells won two Superbowls with the Giants and also took the Patriots to the Superbowl and the Jets to the NFC Championship game where they lost to the Atlanta Falcons. He is generally considered the greatest football mind of our time and should give the Tritons the best chance to get competitive quickly.

"I plan on having this team in Division I by 2001, in the PAC 10 by 2002 and in the Rose Bowl by 2003," Parcells said. "It doesn't really matter what kind of talent I get. I am so good that we will be at the top in no time, no matter what kids come through the system."

Because of Parcells' presence, the outlook for the UCSD football program is garnering attention from all around San Diego and the country. There have already been numerous offers from corporations to build the Tritons a new stadium adjacent to RIMAC Arena. These offers are highlighted by a $12.5 million offer by Tricon Global Restaurant Corporation, parent company of Taco Bell, Kentucky Fried Chicken and Pizza Hut.

"We feel that this would be a good investment for Tricon because this upstart program has great upside," said John Demure, chief executive officer of Tricon. "We whole-heartedly endorse what Parcells is doing in La Jolla. We also hope to secure a contract with UCSD to sell Tricon products at the new Tricon Stadium, which should be operational in two years."

Parcells is already hard at work recruiting players for the new Triton squad. Promises of year-round sun, gorgeous beaches and large, under-the-table stipends have already began to lure some of the top college players away from their current teams. Freshman sensation Michael Vick from Virginia Tech University has

UCSD Staring Team Scores Two Amazing Upsets

After taking out San Diego State, the Tritons win by forfeit in the second round of the NCAA's

By BILL BURGER

Sports Editor

It has been a long year for the UCSD staring team. All season long the Tritons have been blinking before their opponents and racking up the losses. This weekend, however, was different.

Heading into the NCAA National Championship Tournament, UCSD was ranked 48th out of 50 teams in the country and was facing mighty SDSU, a team with an ability to stare mindlessly all day long (they have had a lot of practice in classes).

In one of the biggest upsets of the season, UCSD defeated SDSU in the first round of play by a score of 12 hours 48 minutes to 12 hours 32 minutes.

"I couldn't believe what I was seeing," Head Coach Dan Struovich said. "Our guys just kept on going. I kept expecting them to blink but they didn't. This is the biggest win for this program in a long time."

UCSD's improvement came from an unlikely source, freshman sensation Michael Dolstor.

"Michael has been improving all season," Struovich said. "When he came in this fall he was too fidgety and couldn't concentrate for very long. Now he is a regular staring machine"

When asked about his newly found staring ability, Dolstor gave credit to the UCSD mathematics

"When I was in Math 20A, I would always fall asleep 15 minutes into class," Dolstor said. "Because I snore so loudly, I realized I had to do something about this problem. I found a way to go into a trance and basically be asleep while my eyes are still open and I look like I am focusing. This technique has worked well in Math 20B and C and also has really improved my performance for the staring team. I guess calculus does have real world applica-

In the second round of the tournament, UCSD put up another strong performance, this time against Florida State, again spearheaded by Dolstor. The Tritons had played the Seminoles earlier in the season and been defeated easily by the juggernaut from Tallahassee. This time, UCSD had originally lost the match, as all the Triton competitors had blinked before any of the Seminoles had even squinted.

Struovich felt that it was highly unlikely that any team would be able to perform as well as the Seminoles apparently had, so he filed a complaint with the NCAA and a full-fledged investigation began.

As it turns out, all the Seminole players had their eyes removed before the competition and had replaced them with glass eyes. This kind of practice is obviously illegal, and the Seminoles were disqualified from the tournament.

"We just wanted to be the best staring team that we could be," said John Schmickel, Florida State competitor. "Now look at us, we are out of the tournament and we will probably be put on athletic probation for the next two years. Oh yeah, and we are permanently blind. That sucks too."

UCSD was awarded the victory by forfeit and will now advance to the third round of the tournament, where it will face the winner of Georgia Tech and Chico State. Although getting this far was certainly beyond the wildest dreams of the Tritons at the beginning of the tournament, they are now thirsty for more.

"I think that every little boy dreams about being in the final four of the staring NCAA National Championships," Struovich said. "My kids are no exception. We are trying to stay focused at the task at hand, but it is hard to keep that dream out of our minds."

The Tritons will be in action tomorrow afternoon in Indianapolis. The match will be covered by ESPN and should begin promptly at 3 p.m. Good luck UCSD!
