THE HOLIDAY PARTY

The daughters of Neptune must have some subtle influence with Thor (would he be Uncle Thor?), God of Thunder, for the promised storm waited until Sunday night to drench La Jolla. Saturday evening was so beautiful that the Oceanids Holiday Party was able to spread out onto the terrace at University House. Heat lamps (and possibly the wine) kept the 200 guests warm enough to enjoy the spectacular view over La Jolla, while chatting with old and getting acquainted with new friends.

We are grateful to Rita and Dick Atkinson for their usual hospitality, for the setting is a superb party site. Since the Oceanids tree traditionally does not have lights, the festive atmosphere of the big room was enhanced by tiny white lights that Rita placed in the large potted trees in the corners. Jean Lindsley and her "tree fairies" not only assembled the stored tree but decorated it quickly and happily. Some of the collected decorations deserve to be seen more closely, as many of them are original, handmade creations. Contributed gifts for children were placed under the tree, adding to the spirit of the party.

Bernita Whiting was on hand, both during the decorating phase and the party itself, always helpful in every way, solving any problems that arose. Ilse Warschawski and Anna Maria Buonassisi welcomed arriving guests at the door and made sure that name tags were made out, and also pointed out the basket for monetary contributions from guests who preferred that to baking. (About $200 was accumulated!)

During the evening, Kit Stowell entertained in the living room, playing on one after another of his interesting assortment of instruments, and singing Christmas music. We are fortunate to have such a loyal pair as Evelyn and Sandy Lakoff, who again led the traditional group sing-along carolling in the west room, Evelyn of course at the piano and Sandy encouraging the singing.

Thanks go to Mary Lynn Hyde, who coordinated the decorations, from the red bows at the entrance gate, the greens and poinsettias in the living room, and including the attractively arranged food and beverage tables. As guests arrived, bearing food, all the tables were soon covered with delectable goodies. (In packing up the left-overs, Alma noted that the guests showed great discrimination, as most of the home-made goodies had been totally devoured!) The Newcomers committee did an efficient and speedy job of cleaning up, and as the Atkinsons did not mind having the tree in place over the weekend, Jean was able to wait until Monday to un-trim it.

Tonia, always cheerful and helpful, kept the kitchen under control, and had it spotless before leaving.

Jolly holidays and thank you to all, and a very happy New Year.

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN ISAACS

Another sweet-sad reminiscence of Scripps Institution took place on December 4, to celebrate the publication of the book, John Isaacs and his Oceans by Daniel Behrman. Sponsored by the Marine Life Research Group at SIO, the party brought out many oldtimers-- especially those whose lives had been touched by their acquaintance with John Isaacs. Each one seemed to recognize that his/her conversations with John had left a feeling of wonder, of awe, of surprise at his interests and enthusiasms.

To newcomers: Isaacs was a stalwart of the Scripps staff from his appointment as Associate Oceanographer in 1948 to Professor of Oceanography until his death on June 6, 1980. He was almost an institution himself, and certainly a remarkable person in his different approach to questions about the ocean.

To those who knew John, did you hear him on these subjects?: scurvy in the British Navy; why the California sardine industry disappeared; towing icebergs to transport fresh water; the weather phenomenon of El Niño; growing agricultural plants in sea water; the tuna/porpoise problem; disposal of nuclear waste; the "diver's hot suit". You knew that he helped to create the Isaacs-Kidd Midwater Trawl, early free-fall vehicles, a tethered-float breakwater, a wave-powered barge, and that he proposed many other ocean-engineering ideas.

All of these are in the book, mostly in John's words as taped by science writer Daniel Behrman (now deceased). John's biography is woven into the text. The book was many years in preparation, and involved also a great deal of work by John's wife (and Oceanids member) Mary Carol Isaacs. It was published by the American Geophysical Union, and is available at the Aquarium Bookstore ($16.00 paperback). I think that the book distills an essence of that indefinable science of oceanography.

MINI MINUTES

A groaning side table of Christmas goodies welcomed board members on this December 3 morning. It was hoped the table could just be transported intact to the coming Oceanids' Christmas party two days hence. No such luck. When the meeting was over, members converged around the table and polished it off. Thank you Barbara Starkey.

And speaking of polished off platters, a reprieve of the aquarium party conjured visions of vanished food. No matter. The 220 attending reported the company was good and the museum exhibits interesting. What next? Our annual Christmas party at the Chancellor's house. Everyone is to bring a plate of choice Christmas goodies. Volunteers to help "deck the halls" should report there at 10:00 a.m. and bring their own "boughs of holly". Not to forget that some of us need to stay on after the festival and help put the place back together again, to insure an invitation back, year after year. It is generous of Rita Atkinson to send her own personal piano on that yearly expedition to the big back meeting room.

Later in February, days yet unscheduled, Oceanids and friends will be allowed to view the new Mormon Temple; our guide: Dorothy Lyon.

Membership chairperson Irma Gusfield announced that Oceanids now has 409 paid up members. Another possible 75 languish with not yet paid dues. Meanwhile a card was circulating, which everyone dutifully signed. It was to wish Martha Fredkin a speedy recovery. It was not clear from what, except that she holds the key to our 1992-1993 directory, which should by now already have been in the mail. Carol Schultz volunteered to expedite matters with tact. Swaddling someone else's baby is not easy.

The usual "not enough material is coming in for Bear Facts"-lament came from editor Roswitha Enright. We are urged to attack our pens, typewriters, or wordprocessors. In fact, turn over a new leaf, mend your ways, make a New Year's resolution. Write!

Reporting for the Retirement Association, Pat Kampman told of an effective, speedy, and well attended meeting of that group. It was symbiotic with the Faculty Club's Christmas party. You call the group to order in a remote corner of the room, transact business fast, adjourn and then rejoin the symbiont.

For those who still have spare cash either before or after the holidays, there is now a limited-edition jersey with the International Center logo on it. Only 48 available, so blow it fast.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Now that our national election is over, hardly anyone wants to rehash how it was effected. We complain about the process, but we can't seem to face a change. I propose a non-haphazard method.

How about a major in college--a discipline we could call "Government Leadership"? Students who enroll would master subjects like economics, logic, history, philosophy, leadership, civics, psychology, etc. etc.. Graduates with the highest grades, then form a pool of candidates we can tap. Examination results can be fed into a computer. The 5, 7, or top 9 people will become the designated governing committee, to serve us. Chairpersonship (presidency) rotates yearly or every two years in the group. Over the years, some members drop out to head government agencies; new people come into the committee to replace them.

Like my plumber, electrician, architect, schoolteacher, doctor, pilot-- I want only the best trained to work for me. Can't the top leaders and enablers be the best trained for such a hefty job? Can't we skip the people who may have won an Emmy for acting the best Bozo, or for having been the most power and money grubbing among us? Can't we be served by moral, ethical, intelligent, and trained idealists who burn with the desire to serve their families, their state, their country? They would be fairly and logically chosen by current state of the art methods, not some method set up in 1302. Government by the people for the people.

Elibet Marshall

P.S. I invite comments of why this would or could not work.

BOARD SKETCHES

ARLINE PAA

Liaison with Women's Center Subcommittee

I work per diem at the Student Health Center at UCSD as a registered nurse. My husband is an Asst. Clinical Professor at UCSD Medical Center and Children's Hospital. I have been a member of Oceanids off and on for twenty years, and enjoy making friends through the organization and attending its social functions. I appreciate that as a women's group Oceanids is a known presence on campus.

My favorite interest groups are the Gardening Club and the Birdwatching Group. I enjoy gardening and cooking, knitting and reading. I am working as a volunteer with the wives of migrant workers, and help out at church activities.

I think we have to continue in our efforts to make the Oceanids more widely known on campus and to increase membership. I believe there should be less of a separation between Oceanids and Newcomers. More cooperation would increase our membership.

FLORA L. KENNEDY

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY

Wife of Vice Chancellor of Administration at UCSD.

We moved here in 1973, and I became a member of Oceanids after I was welcomed so warmly by Frieda Urey and her Newcomers Committee. Since I retired only two years ago after having worked for Great American Bank for 18 years I have not had very much time for Oceanid interest groups. I enjoy the social and service contacts, like reading the newsletter, and participating and helping out with Newcomers' activities.

I like playing golf, and am introducing my young grandchildren to football, baseball and basketball. I am interested in the arts and enjoy travelling with my husband and cooking.

Oceanids should keep the emphasis on service and friendship, and from my own experience I can say that help for the newcomers is extremely important and appreciated.

--FIRST IMPRESSIONS-- A RUSSIAN IN CALIFORNIA

I came to California on March 18, 1991--I think I'll remember this date the rest of my life. It was so recently, less than two years ago, but at that time the Soviet Union still existed (rather than a yet unheard Commonwealth of Independent States), and Mikhail Gorbachev was its President, and butter cost 3.6 rubles/kg (now it costs 720 rubles!)... And I had never been in the United States.

I was working in the Space Research Institute, Moscow. The opportunity to work for four months in the California Space Institute, UCSD arose as the result of two lucky circumstances. The first one was that my boss at SRI, Oleg Prilutsky, knew Sally Ride, the director of CalSpace, and wrote her a letter recommending me as a scientist to visit her institute. The second one was 'perestroyka' because before it started (and matured) it was impossible for a woman to go abroad, just by herself, for a long time. Not that it was officially prohibited, but usually it did not happen.

That's how I came to La Jolla, California. La Jolla met me with two weeks of non-stopping rain. That everybody enjoyed and greeted this rain was especially puzzling. All the stories about the "famous Californian climate" and the "five-years drought" sounded impossible to me. (Now I agree that the climate in San Diego is perfect and I have learned that rain is a very rare treat of local weather.) Another strong impression of my first days in La Jolla was a feeling of intriguing emptiness: empty streets with only houses, flowers and cars. I wondered where people are and why Southern California is thought to be overcrowded.

It was a rather difficult time for me. Another language, another country, another world. My beloved family remained in Moscow, I missed my husband and my daughter terribly, news coming from the Soviet Union was getting from bad to worse. It was frightening. What helped me? People I met here, my work, the country itself. I seized this unique opportunity to see America (at least, California), to discover various sides of its being, to learn about its culture, traditions, life of its people. Yes, I do think that California is full of life, culture and traditions. They are different, special, and, maybe strange in their own way, they are simple and sophisticated simultaneously. But the difference does not mean the absence, it only makes noticing and understanding more difficult for a newcomer.

I kept myself busy all the time. Doing science in a new atmosphere, learning from prominent scientists of UCSD, the feeling of challenge and encouragement was a pleasure. American science involved me in an exchange of ideas and interdisciplinary collaboration which is such an important tool of creativity and productivity.

But working was not the only pleasure! The University offers a wide choice of opportunities for every taste. I joined a hiking club and started taking ballroom dance lessons. And during the first four months of my life here I did not spend a single weekend at home. Sightseeing and museums, nationwide famous and local tourist attractions, the ocean and the desert, Sea World and Wild Animal Park, harbor excursion and fireworks on Independence Day, Del Mar Fair and Seaport Village, Los Angeles, Grand Canyon and Las Vegas-- it all was an amazing swirl of colors, sounds, impressions and life. I wanted to encompass all at once, I wished to share this experience with my family and friends who could not see it with me, I wanted to be their eyes.

Still sometimes I was so homesick that the ocean seemed to be pale, the palms looked awful and the blue sky was almost unbearable. It took leaving from here (I spent two months in the Bay area) and coming back to see at once the fascinating, breathtaking beauty of La Jolla, to feel it with all my heart, to fall in love with it forever.

A year has passed since that time. I visited Moscow last December-- and it was the best medicine against homesickness. The very feeling of freedom to come and go was such a new, wonderful thing. I talked about America to my friends. And I brought my family back to San Diego. How upset I was by the thought that my daughter would never see Disneyland! Now it's all over and my biggest joy is to show them all the pleasures and treasures of California.

We all arrived in San Diego on December 31, 1991-- tickets were available for this date only. But there is a Russian belief that how you meet the New Year the same will be for the whole year. We greeted 1992 in California, all together. We are still here, going to meet 1993. My husband found a job in his specialty. He is very much involved with it, proud to apply his knowledge and skill at the uppermost edge of science and technology. Our seven-year old daughter goes to school. She speaks English, and for us her accent sounds perfect. She likes her school, but I am rather concerned about the quality of her education. I think she is not challenged enough. School must teach and demand, not only please everybody.

In August we and two families of our friends traveled in California: Santa Barbara, Highway 1, Big Sur, Monterey, San Francisco, giant trees in the Sequoia National Park. Is it enough to recall only names -- these places are carved now in my memory, captured on pictures and video films. So, it is enough? No. California is beautiful and I feel great here. I got so used to its freedom and style I even felt missing it during my trips in America and to Europe.

In Moscow there is a saying that the amount of freedom is increasing from East to West: Russia, Eastern Europe, Western Europe, New York, California. (After that comes an ultimate outpost of freedom -- Hawaii, and then the West is over, the East begins.)

I haven't checked the part in parentheses yet, but I fully agree with the rest.

HIKING IN SAN DIEGO COUNTY

The first hike of the year was a success as far as the weather, place and attendance were concerned. Several newcomers joined our group of oldtimers. The forest at Cuyamaca State Park was green and cool, but we were also treated to a display of beautiful fall colors. It was pleasant to walk the seven miles trail. Our next trip will be Saturday, January 9. We will most likely go out to the Anza Borrego Desert. Friends and relatives are welcome. Please call Anna Maria Buonassisi at 453-2296 or Rosemarie Lugmair at 454-4573 if you plan to attend or for more information.

Federal Republic of Germany

For all you Janet McNeill fans out there:
She and husband Frank will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary in January. There will be an excerpt of one of her interesting letters in February's Bear Facts. If you want to congratulate them write to:

The Board - not actually an interest group
by definition, but definitely interesting people who meet once a month. You can join them, although, water out. You'll be given a job.

An important organization like Oscar's needs a "board" to coordinate happenings and things.

People meeting engender problems.
Solutions must be found. Money.
People to do it.

Reports must be written. Information broadcast. People have to be invited. Others need to be thanked.
Food and drink provided. Volunteers need directing. "We need to..."
"And don't forget..."

"Dude! I'm way - how are we doing!" "Great!"
"Job." "But next time we should..."
"It was nice." "Was it terrible?"
"Here's our next plan." "Or no! Not again." "We know it."

A large body of women meeting tend to be very funny, although not as funny as a large body of men. They tend to be very very funny.
