Finding New Students Top Priority Here

Declining Enrollment Threatens UCSD Funding

By Cindy Beveridge
Staff Writer

An anticipated drop in student enrollment in the near future emphasizes the need to implement new programs to advance recruitment, Chancellor McElroy told the Academic Senate in their first meeting of the year last night.

"The toughest problem facing the university right now" was treated with a variety of suggestions by the chancellor aimed at maintaining the present rate of enrollment.

The drop is expected to occur as a result of a decline in the nationwide college-age population, limiting the number of applicants to secondary institutions.

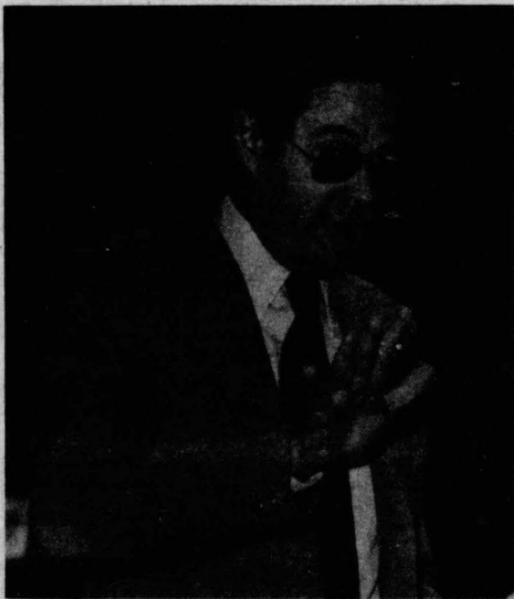

"A more aggressive program in our recruitment procedure is necessary," McElroy said. "We need to retain our present student population until enrollment again takes an upward swing," he said.

A Senate committee responsible for assessing the effects of the projected decline will continue to investigate recruitment programs described by the chancellor. The committee is composed of one student, two members of the Senate, and two vice presidents.

Declining enrollment decreases the amount of money allocated to the university by the state.

Decreased student enrollment is particularly important as the 1978-1979 budget reached an "all-time high" of 247 million, according to McElroy.

Despite the dramatic increase in the budget, a long-awaited retroactive pay raise for the faculty will almost certainly be forthcoming, McElroy, repeating his State of the University address yesterday, assured the sparsely-attended Senate. The $3.5 million necessary for the raise may be funded in part by reserve money in the nuclear science fund.

The Senate also heard a report from Pat Ledden, who is heading an investigation into alternative sites for a faculty club.

Developing a club in the International Center was greeted unenthusiastically by both the faculty and Center officials, despite apparent advantage offered by the Center.

And, the chancellor told the Senate that a prohibitive amount of money would have to be put into remodeling the Coffee Hut to meet Health Standards.

Several of the Senate members voiced remorse at losing the "one place on campus where (we) can meet with friends, scholars, and students in an informal atmosphere."

"Baby Flo," the inflatable Greenpeace whale, put in an appearance at Revelle Plaza yesterday to publicize this Saturday's Walk for Whales. Flo is one of two San Diego Greenpeace whales, and is forty feet long. Flo's cousin is 110 feet long, and both can float when filled with helium. The 9 am Walk will begin at the DeAnza Cove, Mission Bay. The pre-registration phone number is 276-3102.

Del Mar Planning Legal Fight Against North City West Development Report

By Kathy Huffer
Associate News Editor

The City of Del Mar is racing against time in an attempt to at least postpone future construction of the recently-approved North City West development.

In a special meeting last night, the Del Mar City Council voted to seek court action against the City of San Diego, whose council approved the first phase of the North City West on Monday. Such a move must be made by Nov. 5, when their legal right to litigate expires.

"We're serious, and we feel that we're right," Del Mar Mayor Al Tarrington said after the council emerged from a two-hour long closed session.

Council members agreed to withhold details of their strategy until at least next Monday night, when they will discuss more specific plans for a lawsuit.

There are six or seven forms of litigation available to Del Mar, Council member Hervey Sweetwood said after the meeting.

While he would not go into detail, Sweetwood said the council will probably attempt litigation on both environmental and economic grounds.

Sweetwood also indicated that the council's primary objective is to "slow the rate of growth," adding that members want to increase the span of years designated for development of North City West's nine phases.

But Sweetwood did not discount the possibility of stopping development altogether. "Our options are from stopping it in its tracks... to seeing nothing happen at all," he commented.

The council has at its disposal "hundreds of thousands of dollars" in a reserve fund that could be used for legal costs, Sweetwood said. But although the council has saved money, Sweetwood said they would not necessarily spend the entire fund.

Community members in the North County area will also be urged to contribute funds for the lawsuit, according to Sweetwood.

Del Mar resident Joseph Lang, who spoke briefly before the council began its private deliberations, said he found through a "casual poll" that some Del Mar citizens were willing to donate $100 each toward court action. "People are willing to put their money where their mouth is," he said.

The council may combine their legal efforts with the Coalition for Responsible Planning, a citizen action group based in Del Mar that tried to prevent approval of North City West. The Coalition has said in the past it would seek court action against the development.

"It's been discussed," Sweetwood said of a possible joint effort. "As individuals, council members are very close to some of the members of the coalition. We will have a lot of areas of agreement."

Tarrington said at the meeting the council should be able to decide on a legal scheme by early November to challenge the Environmental

You Can't Come Talk to MOM, But Muir Center Consolidates Services

By Mark Laxer

Muir students are "guided" by the therapeutic clamor of pinball machines at Middle Of Muir, now that Page One, the peer counseling center, has closed.

The Muir Dean's Office decided to close the five-year-old center because not enough students were using its services, says Assistant Muir Dean Judith Green.

MOM, which occupies a room once used as a television lounge, does more than Page One did, but does not provide counseling, Green adds.

Because peer counseling is not offered at MOM, Muir students seeking guidance can visit Counseling and Psychological Services at 412 Warren Campus, or call the FOCUS help line at 452-4455.

Like Page One, MOM will probably offer "burn out" sessions, Green says. These are all-night centers offering students a relaxed atmosphere during finals week.

Page One was used minimally compared with the use MOM is currently receiving. Five students each week came in to Page One specifically to be counseled, says former Page One Supervisor Diana Stockdale. An additional 15 students per week were counseled "unofficially," she says.

MOM Supervisor Bobbie Gray estimates 35-50 students use MOM every hour, including the pool and game room.

In addition to receiving the $1200 which had been allocated to Page One, MOM receives $700 from the Muir Residence Hall Budget, $5000 from the Muir Dean's Office and profits from the pool and game room ($4500). This money goes toward the salaries of 15 MOM employees. Page One, on the other hand, was staffed entirely by student volunteers.

MOM also offers referral and information services, a community

Carter's Image Problem

By Michael Grossman and Martha Kumar

A major reason why Jimmy Carter so often looks bad in the media is his failure to appreciate the complex and unavoidable interdependency of the press and the President.

Grossman and Kumar are the authors of "Portraying the President: White House Press Strategies and The News Media," to be published next year by John Hopkins University Press. They wrote this article for Pacific News Service.

"There is no way to do this job as President if you are not willing to think about the media as part of the process in the same way that Congress is part of the process," declared a former high official of the Ford Administration.

Neither Carter nor his staff have yet understood how they must work with the press if the President's message is to get to provide exactly the answers they wanted was indicative of some dark coverup. After all, the new President was untainted by complicity in the outrages committed by the Washington establishment.

Although there is not much Carter can do to change an image of his Administration that one reporter suggested has been "Chiselled in interlude of Camp David meetings with prominent citizens, he lost his momentum when his energy message was knocked off the front pages by the news of his cabinet firings. Instead of creating an impression of a President who was in charge of things, as Carter hoped, the media predictably conveyed a sense that after two and one-half years in office, Carter still was not on top of his job.

Carter's behavior during this crisis was typical of lack of understanding of the importance of scheduling, timing, and of his unfortunate tendency to make superfluous comments that result in driving off the front pages the messages he hoped to convey.

For Carter, it has not been credibility in the sense of truthfulness, but credibility in the sense of effectiveness. It may be that the press has not been fair in presenting his achievements as a leader, but his own inability to communicate effectively also is at the root of his present dilemma.

Letters to the Editor

Coverage Disoriented

Editor: I am disappointed with your handling of the controversy over the Disorientation Manual. This summer I collaborated with Emmett Grogan to write an article for the Disorientation Manual entitled "Education Liberation: From Education Union to Dual Power," a decidedly original and constructive work which you chose to ignore because you have an ax to grind with Jon Bekken.

You also have implied that those who put out the Disorientation Manual are all members of the new indicator collective, a blatant fabrication. Of the 10 people who worked on the manual, only three are new indicator members. In the future, please confine yourself to journalism and avoid using your reporting and editorializing for malicious and vindictive ends.

Bekken, new indicator Off Base

Editor:

Thank you for exposing the shenanigans of Jon Bekken, AS commissioner of student welfare and member of the new indicator. The new indicator is the recipient of a $13,000 budget for the 1979-80 academic year, it is about time that somebody took a long look at the collective and brought some respectability back to the new indicator.

There is no excuse for the irresponsibility shown by the collective in their journalism. Bekken's tactics and unwillingness to work within student fee guidelines indicate to me that a full investigation should be launched into his actions. I call on the Associated Students Council to fully investigate Bekken and the rest of his collective.

Beyond Slogans

There are signs around campus, mainly on walls and kiosks, that this fall's progressive buzz words will be "Democratize the Regents." According to a flyer, "people power" is being put to use, starting with a mass meeting next Monday, to support an amendment to the state constitution that would change the appointed Board of Regents to a popularly elected Board of Regents.

The supporters of this campaign may be falling prey to the notion that more voting means more social justice. If they have thought beyond the composition of their slogan, they are no doubt counting on the occasional sophistication of the California electorate — which defeated anti-gay and antimoking industry propositions on the same ballot last year — to differentiate between their individual interests in paying fewer taxes and their collective interests in a first-rate university. That is a dangerous jump to make.

It is hard to imagine a more frightening tableau than the collection of self-styled taxpayers' advocates taking advantage of a Regents' election to bring the "Spirit of Proposition 13" to the University of California. If the trend in elections for elementary and high school and community college district trustees is any indication, we would get back-to-basics candidates, candidates who would use William Proxmire techniques to ridicule university research projects, candidates who would turn reading lists for political philosophy courses into anti-Communist slogans. "Do you know what they call music up at UCSD?" a Regent candidate who happened on a newspaper feature about our experimental music department would tell a Rotary Club meeting. "They use computers and old tires and do things with their voices that makes 'em sound like geese in a blender."

Much of what a modern research university does could be made to sound nothing short of silly by a good rhetorician. He would have a field day with research programs whose value is only understood by scholars or by the researchers conducting them. This is not to say that voters aren't intelligent enough to make general judgements about issues, but candidates can manipulate information about complex subjects to tell whatever story they want. An example was the barely unsuccessful witch-hunt last year against state Supreme Court justice Rose Bird, which was based on distorted, out-of-context excerpts from complicated legal opinions.

No political scientist would insist that voters have access to enough information to make intelligent choices about all the issues that shape society; the solution that has been devised over time is a balance of power among elected and appointed officers. That system protects UC from excessive political tampering by placing the state Legislature between the Regents and the voters. Local school boards are elected, but volumes of state-mandated regulations and policies insure that no local board could inaugurate the 19th Century. But UC has carefully protected its semi-autonomy from state lawmaking; a popularly-elected collection of yahoos could have a field day rearranging things.

The need to create electoral constituencies, which Regents appointed by governors do not have, would make Regents and Regent candidates as interested in headlines, and in appearing to be constantly active, as other politicians. They would divide up the electorate into ideological bailiwicks and would bring into public discussion many issues the organizers of the "Democratize the Regents" movement would prefer were left out. I'd hate to think what would happen to affirmative action if it was subjected to the same electoral impulses that are putting anti-busing candidates on school boards in Los Angeles and San Diego. The issues aren't similar, but a good politician could easily blur the distinctions.

Supporters of the drive will maintain that it would be better to have Regents responsible to voters instead of to the business community, from which many of them are drawn (this is less true under Gov. Brown than it was under Gov. Reagan). But I imagine that the issues over which a businessman would most likely vote like a businessman, such as UC's investment portfolio, are beyond the information and interest of most voters. Other issues like campus collective bargaining, remain within the jurisdiction of the state Legislature.

For forces that call themselves progressive to initiate any movement to further "democratize" anything — that is, provide elections where before there were none — is to ignore the widely recognized electoral backlash against government and public spending. If a Democratic US Congress can discuss cutting social welfare programs, if a Democratic, formerly liberal state Assembly speaker (Leo McCarthy) favors a constitutional ceiling on state spending, if local school boards are bogged down in attempts to return from innovation to basic education, what do you think shrewd politicians could do to an enormous university that is proposing to spend almost a billion dollars next year? Especially when much of it will be spent on programs that could be made to look unthinkably exotic? The "Democratize the Regents" advocates complain about rising registration fees; a few years of elected Regents and we'll have to pay every cent along with a user fee for desks, libraries and sidewalks.

We saw in the 1960s what happens when the Regents get too involved with educational policy. Under Gov. Reagan they hounded Herbert Marcuse into retirement and began to specify who could speak where and when. Students who are interested in reform in UC ought to stick to lobbying and electing legislators and leave the Regents to meet every month in apolitical obscurity.

Czechs Imprisoned

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Dramatist Vaclav Havel and five other human rights activists were convicted last night on charges of subversion and given prison sentences ranging up to five years.

The official Cechka news agency said Havel, 43, was sentenced to 4½ years and Peter Uhl, a 38-year-old Trotskyite, was given five years as the trial ended after only two days of proceedings. It was Czechoslovakia's biggest political trial since a 1972 case involving seven dissidents.

Lesser sentences were given to the four other defendants.

Vaclav Benda, 33, a former spokesman for the Charter 77 human rights movement, was sentenced to four years; former television commentator Jiri Dienstbier, 42, and Mrs. Otta Bednarova, 54, a journalist, were given three-year sentences, and Mrs. Dana Nemcova, a Roman Catholic dissident and mother of seven children, received a two-year sentence that was suspended.

Four of the defendants said they would appeal while Benda and Nemcova indicated they would not, dissident sources reported. They said Chief Judge Antonin Kaspar rejected a request that the defendants be freed pending a hearing of their appeals.

Visit to Cambodia

BANGKOK, Thailand — Three US senators will go to Phnom Penh today with a new proposal to aid Cambodia's starving people. They will be the first US officials to visit the capital since the communist takeover in April 1975.

Sens. James Sasser, D-Tenn., John Danforth, R-Mo., and Max Baucus, D-Mont., would like to get a green light from the Phnom Penh government for their plan of sending truck convoys carrying a daily load of 1,000 tons of food into the country from Thailand for six months.

The senators said they had no itinerary for their one-day trip.

Spokesman Craven Crowell said the senators, who will fly in a Red Cross relief plane, were "excited about the prospect of going to Phnom Penh" but had no assurance that they would meet with any Cambodian officials there.

Nukes to Continue

WASHINGTON — A presidential commission, while highly critical of those involved in the Three Mile Island nuclear accident, has concluded that safety problems do not warrant a halt in construction or licensing of new reactors, according to panel sources.

The 12-member commission completed its six-month investigation sharply divided over the issue of whether to call for a moratorium on new reactor construction until its safety recommendations are acted upon.

One source said yesterday the moratorium question encompassed "a long involved discussion that went on for three days" with the six supporters of a moratorium one vote shy of getting it approved.

The commission's findings and recommendations, which are only advisory, will be presented to President Carter, probably next Tuesday. The president has said he hoped to follow up on the panel's recommendations "where practical."

Nuclear industry representatives said yesterday they were relieved the moratorium was not approved.

Shah Gets US Visa

NEW YORK — The deposed Shah of Iran, said to be suffering from cancer that has made sharp inroads on his health in the past two weeks, began extensive tests in one of the world's top hospitals yesterday after US officials allowed him to enter the country for medical treatment.

Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, who will be 60 on Friday, was described as weak and moving with a slow, shuffling gait when he arrived at LaGuardia Airport on Monday night after a flight from his place of exile in Cuernavaca, Mexico.

Traveling with him were his wife, a retinue of personal bodyguards, and two Doberman pinscher guard dogs.

Responding to an unofficial description of the shah as gravely ill, a spokesman at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center said, "there is no truth to it at all."

However, State Department sources in Washington who asked not to be identified, said the shah's ailment already had been diagnosed as cancer and a blocked bile duct.

STATE

Gas Bills Increase

SAN FRANCISCO — Pacific Gas & Electric Co. today was granted an interim natural gas rate increase yesterday which should boost the typical customer's winter bill by $2.74 a month.

The state Public Utilities Commission approved the $371 million increase to reflect the rapid increase in the price of natural gas imported from outside California.

For the average residential consumption of 95 therms, the monthly bill will average $22.10.

The 19.9 percent increase in total revenue is part of the $463.7 million requested by PG&E in two applications to recover costs incurred since July 1.

PG&E imports about 35 percent of its natural gas supply from El Paso Natural Gas Co. at rates set by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and about 50 percent from Canada at rates set by the National Energy Board of Canada.

LNG Terminal 'OK'

SAN FRANCISCO — Four important environmental issues involving construction of a $632 million liquefied natural gas terminal near Point Conception in Santa Barbara County have been resolved, the California Public Utilities Commission said yesterday.

The decisions — reached after 17 days of public hearings — cover air quality requirements, access roads and transportation plans during construction, a seawater vaporization system and an electrical transmission system.

The PUC:

— Adopted the air quality standards proposed by the state Air Resources Board. These specify equipment and operation methods deemed best and provide for tradeoffs to reduce emissions from stationary sources so there will be a net air quality benefit.

— Designated a 25-mile-an-hour Hollister Ranch Road as the primary access to the LNG terminal site at Little Cojo Bay. Maximum use is to be made of the Southern Pacific Railroad for onshore building and barges for offshore construction where feasible.

— Adopted a design for the seawater vaporization system at the terminal.

Budweiser Presents Intramural Sports Shorts

As you might have noticed, it was not your typical San Diego autumn afternoon last Saturday. And because of it, the massive IM football program was placed on the back burner for another week. With 68 teams getting washed out of action, today's Bud Poll looks like a xerox copy of last week's. But, sandwiched around Saturday's rainouts, a few teams did manage to tee it up, and some of the results were startling.

In Friday Men's AA action the Stealers coming off an opening week upset loss, regained their championship form of a few years back by knocking off No. 1 rated Bolo 12-6. Sunday afternoon found AAA No. 2 rated Black Death in a state of shock following their tough 19-18 loss to those cardiac kids from Colorado, the Rocky Mountain Oysters. And the Cartwrights (3-0 in the Nebraska AA League) drilled Doggy Style 32-0 to improve their points-for-against record to 84-0 as they prepare for this Saturday's up-coming crucial against No. 1 Debauchery.

All-Campus Tennis

With the tennis event of the year fast approaching, the IM Office formally announced plans yesterday for its gigantic All-Campus Tennis Singles Championships to be held on the campus courts Saturday and Sunday, November 3-4. The All-Campus tournament drew a record 109 entries last year and is annually the feature attraction of the IM tennis program. Men's and Women's Singles competition will be contested in three separate divisions (A-B-C) and will guarantee all participants a minimum of two matches. First-round winners will advance into single-elimination championship bracket with first round losers moving into the consolation bracket.

Last year's Men's A/Open finalists Gil Jones and Jeff Marks are still on campus and are expected to compete.

Entries are now being taken in the RecGym office and will continue through Thursday, November 1. The entry fee will be one can of new tennis balls (top-grade Penn, Wilson, or Dunlop).

The Big Red Wall ...

...is here. And if you haven't tried it yet, you won't want to miss your chance this Saturday on the Revelle when the annual Budweiser Supersports competition takes place.

The Big Red Wall has been resting conspicuously this week in the RecGym courtyard for its inaugural appearance and is just one of the many challenging obstacles to be negotiated in the obstacle course event of Bud Supersports. Other events include coed volleyball, frisbee relay, a round-of-Bud (actually a basketball event), 880 coed relay, and the always popular Tug-of-War competition.

Six person coed teams are still invited to compete with sign-ups being taken now in the RecGym. Competition starts at 9 am sharp with the top two finishing teams to represent UCSD in the city-wide finals against San Diego State and USD. The city finals will take place in early December at the Mission Bay Aquatic Center.

The Pop-Top Corner

The intramural season is well under way, and teams are battling hard for coveted play-off spots. The weeks ahead should prove to be interesting with many key match ups deciding division winners and play-off participants. There are also a number of interesting match-ups which will probably have little or no effect on anyone, but what if

The Hustlers played the Guy Hookers? Would they be able to show them some new tricks? What if the Li'L Rascals played the Three Stooges? Would anyone even bother to watch this comedy?

What if Four Play squared off against Slam Bam Thank You, Ma'am? Would they be fast enough to keep pace?

What if the Athletic Supporters met the Hard Leather Balls? Would they be able to hold up to the challenge?

And finally what if Brenda Spencer's Monday Mornings challenged the Sons of Sam? Would there be any survivors?

Ineligible Player in Cheap Underwater Shots

IM Water Polo Dynasty Ends in Disgrace

By Jon Goetz Sports Editor

The coed innertube water polo season stands at its midway point but for the Underwater Cheap Shots, a team with more experience than the rest of the league put together, the 1979 season is over.

Intramural czar Mike Hipp booted the team out of the league after Scott Berndes, a co-coordinator of intramural athletics, forced Cheap Shot member Jeff Wustman to admit he had lied about his affiliation with the University to illegally obtain a Recreation Privilege card (the card is required for all non-students who play intramurals).

The team also used another illegal player in their game Sunday night, which the Cheap Shots won 9-5 with only five players in the pool (six is usual). Their opponents also used an illegal player in that game, in exchange for allowing the Cheap Shots an extra player.

Their ejection from the league halts a new dynasty team captain Mike Tom was hoping to build. The Cheap Shots have won five championships since the inception of the sport at UCSD. They are practically a living history of the sport as played here.

They ended up winning most of their games, and the athletes that started with the squad stayed with it. Tobi DeLong played with them for four years, then studied at UC San Francisco and played for a team there. This year she returned to UCSD on an exchange program, and rejoined the team, scoring many of their goals with her strong arm.

The Cheap Shots picked up intercollegiate water polo coach Russ Halferkamp this year, adding his international water polo playing experience, to their advantage. Some of the team members have also been to the All-Cals and regional championships of innertube water polo.

Yet the team is gone now, clearing the way for a probable league sweep by Dan Eby's SKLIF team and a sure trip to post-season play.

SKLIF has some of the best athletes of the water polo and swimming programs at UCSD, and has a 3-0 record this season. Eby and Claudia O'Brien both play intercollegiate water polo. Scott Hinman is an assistant coach of the water polo team, and Joe Hernandez was among the top freestylers in last spring's NAAI championships.

Eby can hit the corners of the goal from eight yards out. Hinman, a former junior college All-American, still has a fast backhand shot.

O'Brien, playing Sunday with a fiberglass cast on her left hand, utilized her good hand for several mid-court steals and at least two goals in their 12-9 win over the Squeaky Rubbers.

Hernandez glides down the pool quickly and smoothly, notably better than the choppy swimming style of most players.

SKLIF should benefit from the Cheap Underwater Shot's demise, but they still face competition from the other two AA leagues. Destiny, captained by high-scoring Joe Davis, also has a shot at the championship.

Davis and women's swimmer Nadine Thompson have helped propel the team to a 2-0 record; only allowing one goal and scoring 44 points themselves. Destiny is the favorite to win their league, but the S&M's and the A.S. Holes, also undefeated, will try to spoil their chance.

The Polo Bears also have an outside chance at the AA Title.

The soccer team struck early against USIU Monday, but then gave up three goals in a 3-1 loss. Bill Bullock scored first on a cornerkick from Bruce Logan. USIU tied the score late in the first half, went ahead in the second period off a direct kick, and added another goal later in the game. Nonetheless, coach Stewart Hayes called the contest "the most encouraging game" of late, as the offense has been starting to work together to form a potent threat. "It's the amount of time we've practiced," says Hayes. "We've had some sort of double session all season long." This is the right time of the season to peak, as playoff time approaches. A win in either of the next two games against Biola and Azusa Pacific should put the Tritons into NAAI post-season play.

Abandons Former Principles Dylan's Train Derails

By Ted Burke
Avis Editor

A friend recently tried to convince me that the outright religiosity on Dylan's new Slow Train Coming (the "born-again" variety, America's foremost pockmark on anything spiritual) was valid because Bob the Bard had always used theological, specifically Biblical, references in his lyrics.

True enough, I conceded, Dylan made a lot of use of the Bible in his work, much of it brilliant, ranging from the prophetic sounding spirit-rousers of "When Our Ship Comes In" and "Chimes of Freedom" all the way to the spare, backwoods verse on John Wesley Harding. When he was working in his best form, Dylan would adopt the skeletal cadence of the Good Book and would transform it into something else, a motif that could sustain a writer coming to grips with growing up absurd, the plight of the individual searching for values in an age that's let itself be sucked into a suffocating existential vacuum, and surrealistic impression of a consciousness that's been shattered.

Dylan, of course, had other linguistic ploys: purposeful use of cliché, hypertrophic imagery, and outright banality. But like his use of biblical cadence, Dylan displayed a talent for assuming a kind of voice and then transforming it into something else altogether. In his own way, Dylan adhered to Pound's edict to "make it new." His successes are obvious and too numerous to name here.

Dylan, however, is not out to make anything new on Slow Train Coming. After a series of albums that were nothing less than self-parody (Blood on the Tracks, Desire, Street Legal, releases that tried to recapture a style he hadn't used in nearly ten years which belied the extremes of his burned-out talent), Dylan this time seems to have found a form, or attitude, where he can dispense with the myriad masks and mysterious poses that've marked his public life and communicate a message to the audience in words that are direct, blunt, and unvarnished by the pretense of art (or literature). The message in this case is the kind that I spent years trying to forget after too many years in Catholic school listening to nuns and priests piously pass on the propaganda to kids who, though innocent but too young (or dumb) to argue back, grew up with guilt complexes that wouldn't quit: you gotta serve the Lord, you gotta clean up your act, you gotta relinquish your petty individualism and find salvation in the light of the Jesus, and if you don't, your name is gonna be on His list. With Slow Train Coming, Dylan is in effect repudiating the one discernable message that prevailed in his body of work: that the only answers or values that can be of any use to you are the ones you find for yourself out of your own experiences. It may be that Dylan has found that set of values for himself, and that becoming a born-again Christian may have been just the thing he needed to pull himself out of whatever psychic cesspools he might have been drowning in. It's hard, no matter how mean your tongue or distrustful your mind, to argue against something that gives someone strength, faith, and the resolve to do better. Dylan's new faith, though, is not the quiet, thoughtful dedication of artists like Eliot, C.S. Lewis, or Graham Greene. The tone of the album is pushy, preachy, dualistically apocalyptic, and, in his own way, arrogant. Having found the values he needed after a career spent in the dungeons of his own idiosyncracies, Dylan is renegeing of his earlier advice and finds himself in a mood to tell other people what to do, how to behave, how to think. Dylan is wiping his slate clean for the Lord, and, like the

Evangelical chest-thumpers, presumes he can wipe everyone else's clean as well.

What's most disheartening about Slow Train Coming isn't the fact that Dylan's got religion — there are millions of people who believe in God who are not fanatics and behave in ways anyone would consider rational — but the fact that the most original lyrical talent or rock and roll would produce this kind of warmed over, banal, cheap-shot gruel. This may, however, be the best that Dylan can give us at this time or anytime in the future. After an extended explosion of extraordinary work early in his career, (Another Side of Bob Dylan in '63; John Wesley Harding in '68; a span of five years), it seems to me more obvious that Dylan has used up all of what he had, and had to spend the years after that trying to live his past down (what else could explain a travesty life Sell Portrait). Slow Train Coming, then, is a warning to those who still have some semblance of a brain at the end of the Me decade: be your own man or woman, but don't blow your wad all at once. There's still a lifetime to get through. Dylan is the saddest example of what happens if you don't watch your step.

calendar, bus passes and route information, change, back-up keys, a television and a lounge. MOM also checks out the room Page One had been located in to groups wishing to reserve it.

Critics believe that Page One should not have been closed, saying there is a definite need for peer counseling. "Without the practical advice of peers, things can become very frustrating," one Muir student says.

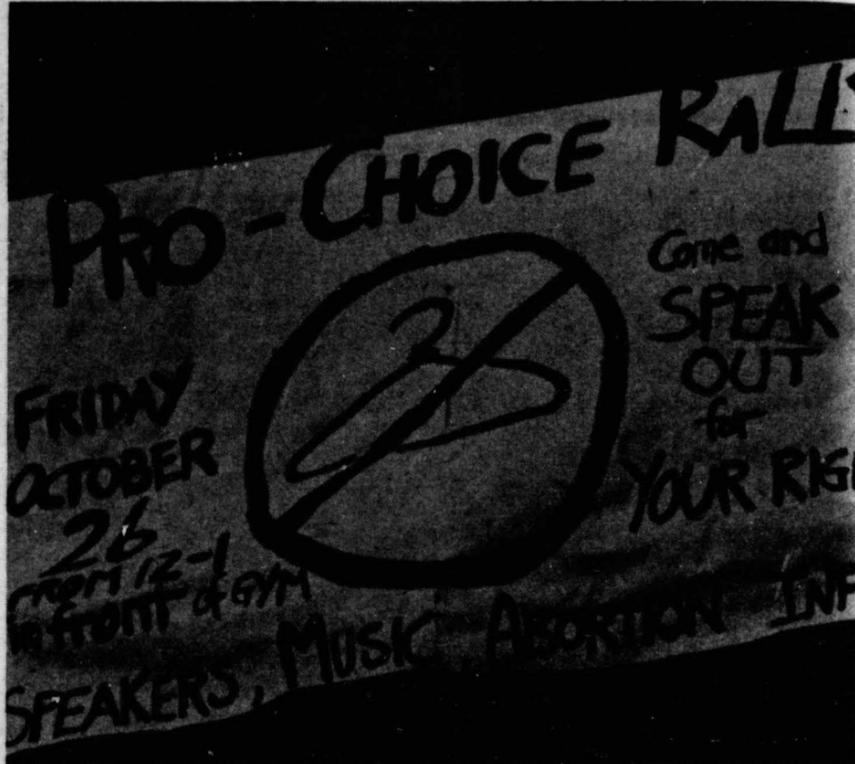

And Stockdale says there will be a substitute for the peer counseling service Page One had provided "hopefully by the winter quarter."

Court Battle

Impact Report for NCW.

Council members claim the development will hurt Del Mar, especially through increased beach use and traffic, air pollution and the strain it would place on the city budget to provide additional city services.

"San Diego has cast the gauntlet in our direction," Sweetwood said at the meeting. "We're at the bulldozers edge (and) we're the first ones to feel the pinch."

This symbol is being used by the Women's Center's Pro-Choice committee to symbolize their Abortion Rights Action Week campaign.

The subject of some debate within the center, it was chosen, representative Linda Sabo says, because it's "an intellectual two by four...people have to face facts about forcing a poor woman to go for whatever means are available."

Sabo says the design, which will be used on posters all over campus, was taken from buttons she saw over the summer at an abortion rights rally in Sacramento.

While "some people will be offended because it is so graphic," another women's center member admits, "we wanted something that would affect students. This will..."
