New brain scan machine aids in study of sleep

By JON NALICK

Special to the Guardian

For part-time work, Chris LePenske could have done worse.

In fact, for two nights, he had a job most would consider a dream come true. He got paid to sleep.

LePenske was part of a unique experiment performed at UCI's College of Medicine which revealed for the first time which parts of the brain are directly involved in dreaming.

The study, which began last June, involved researchers from UCI and UC San Diego and over 20 volunteer subjects.

For the volunteers, though, the job was a bit more stressful than a typical night's sleep. Each slept with an intravenous tube in his arm, several wires connecting his head to a polygraph machine, and was injected with radioactively-tagged glucose.

It was pretty routine, LePenske said, "other than sleeping with needles in your arm."

"The worst part is knowing when you lay down, [the researchers] are counting on you to go to sleep," senior Russ Shiman said. "[But] the people around here are great. They've got a sense of humor and go out of their way to be friendly."

The research team, lead by Monte Buchsbaum, professor of psychiatry and human behavior, has good reason to be in high spirits.

"For the first time in history we'll be able to see what part of the brain is involved with dreaming, emotion, aggression, and sexuality," professor of psychiatry Joseph Wu said.

"It's an uncharted area," research assistant Erin Hazlett said. "No one knows what the metabolism of the brain is like during sleep."

The team also includes UC San Diego professor of psychiatry Chris Gillin, who is an expert in dream study. The scientists decided that cooperation between UCI and UCSD would best suit the study.

UCI's expertise lies in brain scanning technology, Gillin said, while UCSD is proficient in the study of sleep and dreaming.

"[The study] provides a bridge between psychoanalysts and biologists — for the first time, they can meet on common ground, and [find] where our dreams come from," Wu said.

What makes this new research possible is a $1 million PET (positron emission tomography) scanner, purchased by UCI three years ago. There are only around 16 scanners in the United States.

Hazlett said the scanner allows researchers to view which parts of the brain are active during various activities. The important distinction between the PET scanner and more conventional CAT (computer axial tomography) scans is that the PET scanner describes brain function.

Using other technologies, researchers searching for the cause

Transit system changes routes

By ROBERT LEONE
Senior Staff Writer

According to Greg Snee of the Alternative Transportation Office, some San Diego Transit bus routes through and near the UCSD campus will be changing on Feb. 7.

The changes, which were approved by the Metropolitan Transportation Development Board, include fewer bus routes serving Scripps Memorial Hospital and an offshoot of route 34 called 34A which will stop at the La Jolla Colony shopping center on Arriba Street, where the Vons supermarket is located.

The Transportation Alternative Office hopes to have revised campus bus route maps available by the first week of February. Snee also hopes to have new bus schedules available as soon as possible. UCSD's own bus service to UCLA, the UCSD Medical Center, and the on-campus shuttle bus service will not be affected, nor will North County Transit Route 301.

The Alternative Transportation Office is located at Quonset 322 in the Camp Matthews area, or call 534-4235 for more information.

A.S. meeting Remark causes anger

An A.S. council member gave an explanation at the meeting last Wednesday night to nine women from the People's Voice regarding a controversial comment he made before the meeting.

Denise Whisenhunt, a staff writer of the People's Voice (a newspaper for UCSD's African American Community), arrived before the meeting to ask when it would start so the People's Voice staff could attend the meeting. As she left the room she over-

Computer model may help reduce use of lab animals

By LINDA GLAVE
Staff Writer

Though the San Diego Board of Supervisors voted to continue UCSD's contract with the pound for animal research, one man has found what he feels is a viable alternative to the use of animals in scientific research. Hans Sieburg, a researcher at Salk Institute, believes that animal subjects are not a very cost efficient, time efficient, or humane method of "scientific" research, and has investigated the subject.

"My goal, and I think I'm pretty alone on this, is to save animal lives, and to cut down on the suffering. Another benefit is that you save a lot of money and time," Sieburg explained.

Working in conjunction with his wife, Christa, a cellular immunologist at Eli Lilly Research Laboratories in La Jolla, and Dave Pauza, a molecular biologist at Salk Institute, Sieburg has developed a unique method of experimentation. Through a mathematical model and computer simulation, Sieburg has reversed the experimentation process that has been a mainstay of scientific research since it first began.

Currently, research with lab animals involves testing a hypothesis in a variety of different ways, all of them involving the animals. Only after the hypothesis has been proven by these somewhat time-consuming and tedious methods is a mathematical model developed and tested.

"What I have done is to invent the tool that would allow the modeler and the experimenter together to evaluate hypotheses, and, if the hypothesis is good, to come up with a prediction [of the conclusion of the experiment] before the experiment has actually been done," Sieburg said.

Sieburg used the immune system as the model for his com-

MERIT awards given to UCSD scientists

Two UCSD scientists were recently selected by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) to receive a MERIT (Method to Extend Research Time) Award, a prestigious award "given to provide a few outstanding investigators with long-term, stable support in order to foster continued scientific activity."

Richard W. Dutton, Ph.D., professor and chairman of the department of biology, has received a five-year award. His study, "Cellular Mechanisms in the Immune Response," was funded by the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

Gordon Gill, M.D., professor of medicine and chief of the division of endocrinology and metabolism, was given his MERIT award by the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases. His study, "Hormonal Regulation of Control Mechanisms," was approved for a five-year period.

These two most recent awards bring the total to 10 UCSD faculty members who are now MERIT recipients.

Other UCSD MERIT winners include: Elizabeth Barrett-Connor, M.D., professor and chair of community and family medicine; Colin Bloor, M.D., professor of pathology; Robert Boynton, Ph.D., professor of psychology; Russell Doolittle, Ph.D., professor of chemistry and medicine; George Feher, Ph.D., professor of physics; Paul Price, Ph.D., professor of biology; Samuel Rapaport, M.D., professor of medicine; and John Ward, Ph.D. professor of radiology. Dutton and Gill have been members of the UCSD faculty since 1968.

Regents lecturer to deliver two free speeches

Tom Wicker, a nationally syndicated columnist with The New York Times, will deliver two free public lectures at UCSD, Jan. 26 and 28, as part of his week-long campus visit as a Regents Lecturer for the department of history.

Wicker, who has served as a chief of The Times' Washington Bureau, is the author of eight novels and four non-fiction books, among them Kennedy Without Tears, and JFK & LBJ: The Influence of Personality Upon Politics.

Wicker's lectures will deal with the topic "The State of American Politics on the Eve of the Primary Elections" and will be held at 8 pm in UCSD's Peterson Hall. For further information, call UCSD Extension at 534-3400.

Remark: Racism by councilmember alleged

Continued from page 1 heard Dave Manheim, A.S. vice president administrative, say that he hoped the African American Student Union (AASU) wouldn't attend the meeting.

"It was in a negative tone... We weren't there for the African Student Union... I was upset... it was depressing," explained Whisenhunt. She felt it was an act of "blatant racism."

"I was doing their legislation for them [the AASU]. If I was racist I wouldn't have submitted on their behalf," Manheim said. Next Wednesday the council will vote on allocating $3,000 for two speakers for Black History Month, and Manheim had submitted this legislation to council.

Manheim made his comment in part, he says, because the AASU didn't need to come last week to the meeting to show support for the allocation request. They would need to come this week.

"I've always encouraged people to come to A.S. meetings... that's where I found I was wrong," Manheim said later.

"I had falsely assumed that she was from the AASU. They were there from the People's Voice.

That was my fault," Manheim admitted.

In other council news, the council voted to allocate $1,794 to send two council members to the NACA Conference in Washington, after a lengthy discussion regarding why UCSD needs two people to go rather than just one.

"It's [the conference] too big for one person to go to," said Evan Weisenfeld, chair of the University Center Board. Other council members expressed concern over the need for the entire council to benefit from the conference when so much money is spent sending representatives there.

UC Davis student selected as Regent

Deborah Ruth Thorpe, a junior at UC Davis, will be recommended for appointment as the University of California student Regent for 1988-89. The full Board of Regents will act on the appointment at its Feb. 18 meeting at UC San Francisco.

Thorpe was among 68 applicants representing the University's nine campuses. She succeeds Jacquelyn Ross, also from Davis, as the student Regent and is the third student in four years from the Davis campus to hold the position.

The University of California Student Association nominated three finalists to be interviewed by a Regents' committee. The other two finalists were Erik Basil from UC San Diego, and Sumi Cho from UC Berkeley.

Thorpe, a chemistry major, served as a high school science and mathematics teacher for four months in Trinidad, West Indies, before entering UC. At Davis she has served as a resident advisor helping new students adjust to university life, and as an academic peer advisor helping with course scheduling and academic requirements.

In a statement submitted to the selection committee, Thorpe listed the three most important issues facing California higher education today as increasing the enrollment of minorities and women, improving relations between community colleges and four-year universities, and maintaining a high standard in education and research.

Upon confirmation by the Board, Thorpe will serve as Regent Designate, sitting on the board a non-voting member, until July 1, 1988 when her term as student Regent begins. Her terms expires on June 30 1989.

King Day Parade a success for UCSD

Editor:
Third College students, staff, and faculty would like to thank all of the very enthusiastic students from Revelle, Muir and Warren who joined us on our "float" in the Martin Luther King Day Parade in downtown San Diego, Saturday, Jan. 16. The float and its entourage were a rousing representation of UCSD and I am very proud of everyone who was involved. This was the first year Third College participated in the Martin Luther King Day Parade and I believe we have established some very large footprints for others to follow.

For those of you who haven't heard, the parade judges awarded us a beautiful third place trophy! Thank you again, all of you!

South African sanctions detrimental to job market

Editor:
It has recently been reported that some members of Congress will be introducing more punitive sanctions against the regime in South Africa to induce the government to institute further reforms. Strong opponents of apartheid have argued, however, that sanctions and disinvestment might have an adverse effect on the livelihood of black South Africans. Recent opinion polls of South Africans confirm these suspicions.

John Kane-Berman of the South African Institute of Race Relations reported last month that in 12 of 14 polls conducted over the last year, more black South Africans were opposed to sanctions than in favor of them. In eight of these polls, opponents of sanctions outnumbered supporters by a two-to-one margin.

Likewise, a survey by Germany's African Foundation found that two-thirds of black coal miners in South Africa do not want sanctions because they fear sanctions will cost them their jobs. The fact is, sanctions have already cost many South Africans not only their jobs, but the opportunity for advancement in a society that is moving slowly but surely toward desegregation and full democratization.

Students to tell all about themselves

Editor:
As founder of We The People, a new student publication, I would like to take this opportunity to respond to Margot Waltz's feisty letter (Guardian, Dec. 19).

Congratulations to yet another astute reader who recognizes that something seems to be missing from the student publications of UCSD: the student. Like Ms. Waltz, I, too, would like to read about the diverse and noteworthy (though not necessarily well-known) students and student organizations of our unique campus. Students aren't getting equal coverage from the publications in support.

Devra Beth Polack
We The People

Yet, while UCSD journalism needs to focus more on the students themselves, is it really realistic, or even fair to expect the UCSD Guardian to cover them all (along with news, features, sports, shorts, etc.)? No, what we need is a publication of our own; one that will specialize in the UCSD student; one that will represent the diversity of the student population, because that's what it's all about; one that's all about "we the people" of UCSD.

As a matter of fact... Margot Waltz' letter is extremely timely, because, at this moment, students are coming together to create one such publication. We The People is a brand new quarterly publication formed not only by the students and for the students, but about the students as well. And unlike other alternative media of UCSD, We The People focuses on people of all different races, religions, political views, sexual gender, sexual preference, etc. (plus no caffeine...) What more could a "nosey" reader like Ms. Waltz (and myself) want?

We're just in our beginning stages, and welcome the input and ideas of the students we seek to represent. People who like to write, design, or just meet people, or who know of interesting students or events to profile, are encouraged to contact us at UCSD L-5, La Jolla, 92093 or through A.S. and EDNA.

Because, as Margot Waltz wrote so well: "Everyone is interesting."

Emergency care

AIDS association: will it kill us?

By CAROL LOBO

It seems one lucrative business these days would be manufacturing rubber gloves. With the increasing fear of AIDS no one wants to take the risk of catching this ever-spreading disease. Precautions are being taken by using rubber gloves in situations where they haven't been used before. I notice dentists are now using rubber gloves — which is a good idea considering what type of work they are doing. Many firemen are using gloves as well when dealing with injury victims, especially in cases of heavy bleeding.

Unfortunately another type of problem exists. Many people are so far stricken with the thought of catching AIDS that they often refuse to have contact with strangers on any account. This includes police and firemen in crisis situations.

In an article in the Village Voice, it was noted that an actor died on the streets of New York while having a seizure because when police arrived they refused to help. They told the man's friend to be patient and wait for the paramedics to arrive. Since the two men were together in a "gay part of town" the police assumed that they were gay and therefore had AIDS. They didn't want to risk catching the disease so they refused to help at all, claiming they are not prepared to handle those types of situations.

I find this hard to believe considering the kind of training policemen go through. I can understand how people can be afraid; this is a natural response. However, I do not find this a legitimate excuse for such irresponsible behavior. Lives are being sacrificed in the hope of avoiding the disease. It's not as if discretion can not be taken to avoid being infected with the virus while being able to help victims at the same time. By using gloves and masks while on duty, firemen and policemen would not have to be as worried and could fulfill their assignments with little hesitation. People should consider this option before deciding to deny assistance as a result of fear.

How much would you pay for a superbowl ticket, and who do you think will win?

 of a disorder would only be able to determine if structural irregularities of the brain were involved. With the improved technology of the PET scanner, subtle differences in the brain's energy use could clue scientists to the metabolic nature of the disorder even in the absence of structural changes.

Where a CAT scan "might show you the tubes of a television, a PET scan would show you what was on the screen," Wu said.

However, at well over $600 a scan, research of this kind can be a gamble, Hazlett said.

For example, radioactive material must be flown down from UC Davis on a chartered plane and rushed to the medical center, since the isotope has a half-life of slightly less than two hours. For the scans to be perfect, subjects need to be in the REM (rapid eye movement) sleep that is associated with dreaming when the isotope is administered.

The tagged glucose is absorbed in parts of the brain that are most active. When positrons from the glucose collide with electrons, both are obliterated. The PET scanner picks up gamma rays emitted by the reaction and, with the help of a computer, converts the data into maps of the brain.

However, because of the short half-life of the material, it must be injected into the subject as soon as possible. The timing is critical because people dream only 25-35 minutes at a time, Gillin said. Even so, the researchers have made many quality scans.

"We need about 30 minutes, so we're right on the edge," he said. "We're lucky to get as many as we have. Here you have a guy with a catheter in his arm, an EEG, sleeping in a small bed, while we're flying the isotope down from Davis. People are all around. Then at the time of the [isotope] injection, we're drawing blood samples. We're very lucky we're not waking people up in a major way."

To provide additional clues about dreaming, the researchers asked subjects about what they remembered immediately after waking up, focusing on dream content and the presence of color or vivid visual images.

"We correlate dreams with PET scanner data ... to see if people with colorful, visual dreams used more of their cortex than those with less visual dreams," Hazlett said.

"Preliminary results suggest the areas of the brain involved in thinking are more active than those related to vision," Wu said.

"It's a landmark study," Wu added. "We haven't had a chance to show outside groups yet. It's very hot data."

Wu said the team is now analyzing its data and may reveal its findings at a national conference of psychiatrists in April or May.

"The information will provide the basis for a better understanding of the brain" and disorders, including depression, narcolepsy and insomnia, Gillin said. □

Anti-Contra aid rally

In a demonstration of public disapproval for U.S. military aid to the Nicaraguan Contras, approximately 500 advocates of peace in Central America held a rally in Balboa Park Saturday. The House and the Senate are scheduled to vote Feb. 3 and 4 respectively on whether or not to increase and extend military aid to the Contras. The rally was organized and sponsored by Central America Information Center in downtown San Diego.

 puter simulation. The hardware, called the Cellular Device Machine (CDM), is a board that may be plugged into a standard personal computer, like an Apple II. A piece of software named the Artificial Immune System (AIS) combines with the CDM to simulate either a normal or diseased immune system.

The biological immune system works in two functionally integrated parts. The first, called the innate immune system, simply recognizes substances, called antigens, which occur in the body systems. The second, called the adaptive immune system, identifies specific antigens through a variety of adapter molecules known as antigen receptors.

The adaptive immune system also has a process called memory, which enables it to a quicker and more efficient secondary response if the invading antigen persists or challenges the host a second time. Both parts, however, make a distinction between self and non-self antigens. This distinction is learned and effected through comparison against the system's antigen receptor variety or repertoire, and only foreign antigens cause the immune system to respond.

The Artificial Immune System program creates a mathematical model of the immune system using the Cellular Device Machine, whereupon data (such as antigen types) can be fed into the program (the immune system) and the information processed accordingly.

"The output would always look like, if it's a body-owned molecule, then [there will be] no immune reaction. If it's a foreign molecule, then [there will be] an immune reactions," Sieburg said. What makes Sieburg's invention so original is that it represents a breakthrough in experimental science. Computer simulations have been attempted before, the most notable of these being the Lotka-Volterra oscillator approach. A simple example of their equation is a model of the interaction between a population of predators feeding on a population of prey. Both populations oscillate with respect to time and density of the other population. However, none of these simulations has ever been completely successful.

"What Hans has done is take a mathematical theoretical approach in an experimental context," said Arnold Mandell, professor of psychiatry at UCSD and director of the Laboratory of Biological Dynamics and Theoretical Medicine. Mandell explained that previously scientific research has always involved the search for the interactions of components, or the missing pieces, that caused an immunological reaction, which then led to the experimental search for a solution or cure.

"The immune system is a multi-component system that sometimes gets into bad corners - it's not all the components but the interactions of them that create

UNIX frees students from the typewriter

Ken Reinstein/Guardian

Dr. Jeff Elman, a professor of linguistics, said that UNIX is very efficient, although some users still want better access.

By LAURA KNAPP

Have you ever wanted to throw your typewriter in a trash can after the ribbon runs out? Or are you tired of using an entire bottle of white-out for every paper that needs to be typed? What do you do when you decide you need to move a paragraph after your paper's done?

Worry no longer. There is a solution to these problems that does not involve buying a computer. It's the UNIX systems word processor available through the computers on campus, and which is open to all students, whether you're studying engineering, music or literature.

Dr. Jeff Elman, a professor of linguistics, commented on the computer system here. "UCSD [has] greater access to computers in general to a wider diversity of students, staff and faculty than at most places... Unfortunately, there are still some groups who don't have the access they need or want, but, overall, the system's pretty good."

Taking Elman's course is one way to learn how to get the most out of UNIX. Linguistics 63, (an introductory course to UNIX.)

Dan Gradwohl, a senior history major, has been a T.A. for the class for eight quarters and he thinks it's beneficial for people to learn general computer skills and UNIX primarily for the simple reason that it makes it so easy to write papers.

"Since I learned [UNIX], I've used it for every single paper. [It's] something that's there that people do not know about."

He said that this was a problem for him when he came to UCSD. "Before I took the class,

I never realized what the computers were for. A lot of people don't realize they're here for us to use."

It is possible to learn to use the system on your own, but starting sometimes can be difficult. According to Phil Mcoog, a UNIX consultant at UCSD, students sometimes come in to type a paper that's due the next day on the word processor. If they've never used it before, "the first paper is going to take twice as long as on a typewriter, but after the initial experience it becomes much easier."

In recent years, the system was not available to all students. Now, however, "access has been enhanced to the point where everyone can get an account. In the past, it was a problem... people universities were using the system, but it did not become commercially available until about four years ago. Elman said that one of the reasons for this is that, by this time, there was a need for UNIX in industry. Universities were training engineers in UNIX, yet, when they got out of college and began working, they were finding archaic software rather than the more up to date UNIX system they had been used to. Elman said that because of this "A generation of UNIX bans or fanatics was bred."

Since that time, new technology has made available hundreds of types of computers that are affordable to the people in their homes, even some that have word processors that rival those of UNIX. Elman feels, however, would do anything to get an account." Gradwohl said.

Electronic mail allows people to send letters and papers through the computer to places as far as London. It is a way to pass on information to other locations that also use UNIX.

Mcoog finds problems not with the UNIX system itself but with the UCSD resources. He said that sometimes the system is overcrowded because so many people want to use the computers and the UNIX system is being overloaded.

The UNIX system started in the mid 1970s at Bell Laboratories. In 1979, '80 and '81 Bell Labs made the system available to universities around the country for free, but there was no support in the event of repairs or breakdowns. This is about the time when the UCSD department research started in areas such as chemistry, cognitive science, linguistics and music.

The UNIX system grew as a small but increasing number of that the UNIX system is still "one of the single most popular operating systems."

Elman believes that UNIX affords benefits beyond word processing. One is that it can be used on several different types of computer systems. Also it provides self-contained programs with each doing a specific job which can, in turn, be combined in more complex programs. This makes it easier for people who do not know how to program to use the system.

Electronic mail is another attribute which makes UNIX useful and popular. This feature allows people to send letters and papers through the computer to places as far as London. It is a way to pass on information and knowledge to other locations that also

N.Y. Times columnist to speak on U.S. politics

By LINDA GLAVE
Staff Writer

Tom Wicker, syndicated columnist and former Washington bureau chief for the New York Times, will speak next week on the present state of the American political parties. Wicker has been invited to UCSD as a Regent's Lecturer by the history department.

"Every year or so, our department has attempted to bring to the campus people who are interesting, outstanding figures from the world of journalism, law, and politics. The Regent's Lectureships are designed to bring to the campus non-academics... who are extremely talented in their line of work." Michael Parrish, a history professor and chair of the department said.

"I'm glad that the history department sponsored him," communication professor Robert Horwitz said. "It's good for us to bring good working journalists who are in influential positions vis-a-vis their notoriety, their influence. He's a player on the national scene. He's a part of the public's fear of policy."

In addition to working for five different newspapers as writer, editor, and correspondent, Wicker has also held positions as the executive director of the Southern Pines Chamber of Commerce in North Carolina, and as public information director of the North Carolina Board of Public Welfare in Raleigh.

From 1960 to 1964 Wicker was a correspondent with the Washington Bureau of the New York Times, and chief of the bureau from 1964 to 1968.

Wicker has been an outspoken and somewhat controversial columnist for the New York Times since 1966 when he first started writing his now nationally syn-

"He's a very reflective columnist."

—Robert Horwitz

dedicated column "In the Nation." In 1972 he moved to the New York offices of the Times and continues to write "In the Nation" for the Op-Ed Page.

"He's a very reflective columnist," Horwitz said. "He isn't a mundane, [or] predictable [columnist]. A lot of columns are tedious and dull. His are not. They are usually enlightening and interesting."

Daniel Hallin, a communication professor, said "Wicker is perfect [to be a Regent's Lecturer] because he's a very prominent journalist, and a journalist who can speak to the academic community better than most because he's very widely read and he knows something about history.

"One problem with American columnists is that they are, in a way, just doing recording through another medium, they're just trying to give you a bit of information dug up from some sources that they have. [They don't] fill what is a big hole in American journalism, which is to give analysis, to give opinion, to talk about what the news means and what we should do, rather than to just give more news. I think that Wicker more than others gives you that kind of analysis and a real opinion. He knows a lot about history and can put a lot in perspective," Hallin said.

Horwitz concurred, "Wicker uses the arguments that are in the public arena that get no press. He usually plays those, and tries to make arguments, and tries to frame larger arguments than the immediate day's news. And he does that very well."

Wicker will speak this Tuesday and Thursday in Peterson Hall room 108 at 8 pm. □

Lecturer to address the subject of sexual harassment in the academic community

By MICHELE BIDWELL
Staff Writer

Dr. Bernice Sandler, director of the Project on the Status and Education of Women of the Association of American Colleges, will be hosting a forum on the issues of sexual harassment in the academic community and other related topics. The lecture will be held on Thursday, Jan. 28, from 12:30-2:00 pm in the International Center.

AS former education specialist for the House of Representatives' Special Subcommittee on Education, Sandler played a major role in the passage of Title IX, a law which prohibits sexual discrimination against students and employees. Sandler has also held distinctive positions on various national committees and councils and has received several awards and six honorary doctorates for her work. She is considered a national expert on sexual harassment.

"Sexual harassment has been a problem on campus for a long time, but it has really come out in the open in the last few years because the laws have changed," Sandler said.

"Sexual harassment is any unwanted behavior of a sexual nature that occurs in a power relationship when one person has the power to harm another person," she explains. In an on-campus situation, "faculty and staff are really taking advantage of the power they have over students."

"I'm primarily talking about men harassing women because 99 percent of it is men harassing women, although it is possible for women to harass men," Sandler added.

Dr. Bernice Sandler

Sandler also stated that the legal definition of sexual harassment has expanded. Now, sexual harassment not only refers to sexual bribes and/or threats but it also includes, what Sandler terms, "a chilly or offensive environment." For example, joking about a woman's sexuality and/or making lewd references and gestures is now defined as sexual harassment.

Sandler estimates that "20 to 30 percent of women undergraduates experience some form of sexual harassment [and] sexual harassment on the graduate level is more prevalent."

"What I'm trying to do is give people an understanding of what sexual harassment is and what it isn't," Sandler said. She will also be addressing actions that sexually harassed victims can and should take, both informally and formally.

Sandler's forums are sponsored by the Student Safety Awareness Program, assistant Vice Chancellor Faustina Solis, the deans from all four colleges and the Women's Caucus. For more information on Dr. Sandler's forums, contact the Student Safety Awareness Program at 534-5793. □

When asked if UNIX was becoming old or outdated, Gradwohl replied, "There is still a lot of room for expansion... I'm still learning." Even after being a T.A. for eight quarters there are things he does not know about the system. He feels there are no real limitations for the capacity to expand the computers.

Elman thinks that UNIX is very beneficial and powerful. In his opinion, the only drawback defects," Mandell said. "The causes are really irrelevant, and, with Hans' machine, we can ignore the cause and go into the middle of the disease."

The most obvious applications of Sieburg's AIS program are to the study of cancer and AIDS.

"We have considered the responses to viruses and this leads into the question of cancer, because there are virus-induced cancers," Sieburg said. "However," he added, "the precise applications to individual cancers are far in the future. We have to do more thinking, more search for relevance."

In studying AIDS, however, the question approached was whether all AIDS symptoms and ultimate death are the result of the specific depletion of T-4 cells. T-4 cells carry the receptors that are specific to the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV). When Sieburg began his research about a year ago, specific T-4 cell depletion was believed to be the primary cause of AIDS in humans.

It was discovered that it was not solely the depletion of T-4 cells that causes AIDS, but instead, a combination of more than one kind of cell defines the development of that disease.

Sieburg foresees his invention being used not only by researchers in hospitals and laboratories, but by universities as a training tool.

"We see students being educated on the immune system by this simulator. They hear a lot about T-cells and such in their classes, but they don't see them. They can play around with [cells on the computer] and actually see what does and doesn't work. So, it is essentially a textbook on the computer," Sieburg said.

Mandell asserts that computer simulation of biological systems is an emerging field, and that the only limitations are "the imagination and capacity of the theorists."

"It's an early 'golden age' in the field. If it does work - it will work - it's unlimited." ☐

Commentary

If defense spells win, the Redskins are in

By MIKE U'REN

This has been one of the craziest seasons in NFL history. Out of only 15 games, three were played by replacement players during the strike.

The San Diego Chargers jumped out to an 8-1 record, only to drop their next six and eliminate themselves from the playoffs.

How about the Rams trading away Eric Dickerson to the Colts where he helped the Colts to their first division title and playoff birth since 1977? Let us not forget Rams running back Charlie White. Backup to Dickerson for the last two years, he led the league in rushing for the first time in his career.

Yes, it was a crazy season but the Super Bowl representatives from both leagues have finally been decided. The Washington Redskins who will be making their third trip in the last six years will face the Denver Broncos, the first team since the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1978 and 1979 to participate in consecutive Super Bowls.

Neither team coasted into the Super Bowl. The Redskins upset a tough Chicago Bear team in Chicago and then held off a last minute rally by the stubborn and upset-minded Minnesota Vikings to have the honor of representing the AFC in the Super Bowl.

Likewise, the Broncos defeated the Houston Oilers and held off a late rally by the Cleveland Browns when Ernest Byner fumbled at Denver's two yard line and was recovered by Denver cornerback Jeremiah Castille to seal the victory. Nevertheless, the outcome is the same. These two clubs will meet each other at San Diego's Jack Murphy Stadium on Jan. 31 to see who is the best team in the NFL.

This game will showcase the offensive talents of Denver's young quarterback John Elway, this year's Most Valuable Player in the NFL, and his three receivers.

Surf team chooses 1988 members

The gathering of UCSD surfers competing in the team tryouts at Black's Beach on Saturday was a dynamic foresight of what to expect this season from these talented artisans of the wave as they carved their powerful signatures into the face of the pounding surf. Ranked fourth in the nation, UCSD is in position to topple the top schools from California, the East coast, Hawaii and Texas.

Two factors explain UCSD's contention for the National Championship title, said team coach and competitor Mike Gleeve. "We are looking better than last year. We've got four of our six strongest surfers returning from last year in addition to a few highly impressive newcomers."

Two teams compete for UCSD, each consisting of six men, one woman, one kneerider, and one bodyboarder. This year's

"A" team surfers are Brad Africano, Steve Colt, Gleeve, Alan Johnson (team captain), Don O'Neil, and Sean West. In the women's division is Isabelle Tihanyi.

In kneeriding competition UCSD boasts U.S. Amateur National Champion and U.S. National Team World Championship competitor Jack Beresford. 1987 Collegiate Champion Bob Crawford will compete in the bodyboarding events.

"With such a strong lineup, we are definitely going to be in contention for the national title," said Gleeve. "There's a lot of excitement about what we see for both the "A" and "B" teams because we have so much talent."

Beresford, club president, is also very enthusiastic about the team but is disappointed at the lack of funding this year. According to Beresford, the A.S. See SURFING, page 13

Budget Committee cut funding for UCSD's entry fees, which total $360 per contest.

"We are possibly the best team in the country, competing against the top schools in the world," Beresford said. "We are self-run through the students . . . Mike Gleeve volunteers as our coach."

"Fundraising will be the team's only way of paying entry fees," Beresford said.

Sunrise on Feb. 6 brings the true test as state competition among UCLA, UCSD, UCSB, USC, CSU Long Beach and Golden West College begins at the Oceanside Harbor Jetty. ☐ ers the Three Amigos (Vance Johnson, Mark Jackson, and Ricky Nattiel).

The Redskins will feature the Hogs from their defensive unit, Charles Mann, Dexter Manley, and Dave Butz.

Elway has been a prolific passer all season and will be the starting quarterback for the AFC in the Pro-Bowl game. In Sunday's game against the Browns he was nothing short of spectacular. He completed 14 of 26 passes for 281 yards and three touchdowns. He was so dominating in the first half, Denver jumped out to a 21-3 lead, that the punter didn't even come onto the field until there were only 45 seconds left to play in the half. Elway shredded the Browns' defense, who gave up the fewest touchdowns in the AFC during the regular season, with his scrambling technique and his incredible arm.

Mark Jackson and Rookie Ricky Nattiel, two of the Three Amigos, combined to catch nine passes for 228 yards and two touchdowns against Cleveland's defense. The third member, Vance Johnson who is the best of the three receivers, watched the game from his hospital bed after suffering from a hemorrhaging femoral artery in one leg. Johnson received the injury during the victory over Houston the week before, and is expected to play come Super Bowl time. This could be bad news for the Redskins defensive backs who had trouble containing Minnesota's explosive receiver Antony Carter during Sunday's outing against the Vikings. For the Redskins to be victorious, their pass rush must keep pressure on Elway throughout the game. Led by defensive ends Mann and Manley and outside tackle Dave Butz, the Redskins were able to sack mobile Viking quarterback Wade Wilson eight times — one shy of the playoff record set by the San Francisco Forty-Niners in 1984. The Redskins will have to try to get to Elway early and must keep him in the pocket because he is a very effective passer on the run. Although Denver has a very potent offensive attack, their defense leaves much to be desired. The Orange Crush seemed to crumble right in front of Cleveland quarterback Bernie Kosar, who led his team to four consecutive touchdowns in the second half.
