CALIFORNIA GAY THERAPY BAN SPARKS COMPETING RULINGS

First-of-its-kind sexual orientation law set to take effect on Jan. 1

LISA LEFF ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO

Two federal judges in Sacramento have arrived at opposite conclusions on whether the state's firstof-its-kind law prohibiting licensed psychotherapists from trying to change the sexual orientations of gay minors violates the Constitution. The measure remains clear to take effect on Jan. 1.

U.S. District Judge Kimberly Mueller on Tuesday refused to block the law after concluding that opponents who have sued in her Sacramento court to overturn it were unlikely to prove the ban on "conversion" therapy unfairly tramples on their civil rights.

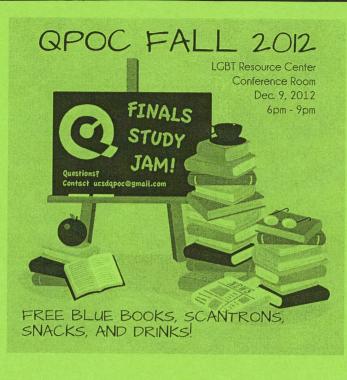

The opponents argued the law would make them liable for discipline if they merely recommended the therapy to patients or discuss it with them. Mueller said they didn't demonstrate that they were likely to win, so she wouldn't block the law.

Mueller issued her decision in a lawsuit filed by four counselors, two families, a professional organization for practitioners and a Christian therapists group. It came half a day after her colleague, U.S. District Judge William Shubb, also in Sacramento, handed down a somewhat competing ruling in a similar, but separate lawsuit.

Saying he found the First Amendment issues presented by the ban to be compelling, Shubb late Monday ordered the state to temporarily exempt three people named in the case before him — two mental health providers and a former patient who is studying to practice sexual orientation change therapy. The judge said during a hearing earlier Monday he would have considered keeping the law from taking effect for all licensed therapists, but that the case before him had not been filed as a class action that could be applied to unnamed plaintiffs.

Sen. Ted Lieu, who sponsored the law, said Tuesday because Shubb limited the scope of his decision, Mueller's ruling means the law may be applied statewide at the beginning of the new year — except for the three individuals mentioned.

The future of the statute remains unclear, however. Mathew Staver, chairman of the Christian legal group Liberty Counsel, appealed Mueller's decision to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and said he would seek an emergency injunction to keep the law on hold until its constitutionality is determined.

SAME-SEX SPOUSE OK IN MARINE BASE CLUBS

Corps reacts to Army group not allowing woman to join officer spouse organization

DAVID CRARY ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK

The Marine Corps has advised its legal staff that spouses clubs operating on its installations must admit same-sex spouses if the clubs wish to remain on the bases.

It's a step the other service branches haven't announced as they grapple with how to accommodate same-sex couples following repeal of the don't ask, don't tell policy that barred gays and lesbians from serving openly.

Underscoring the challenges, the Marines' legal advisory — obtained Wednesday by The Associated Press — refers to an ongoing issue at the Army's Fort Bragg in North Carolina where the officers' spouses club has denied admission to a same-sex spouse.

The Marine Corps commandant's Staff Judge Advocate, in an email to legal offices throughout the corps, said the Fort Bragg events had "caused quite a stir" and cautioned, "We do not want a story like this developing in our back yard."

The memo noted spouses clubs and various other private institutions are allowed to operate on bases only if they adhere to a nondiscrimination policy encompassing race, religion, gender, age, disability and national origin.

"We would interpret a spouses club's decision to exclude a same-sex spouse as sexual discrimination because the exclusion was based upon the spouse's sex," the memo said.

A Marine Corps spokesman, Capt. Eric Flanagan, said the Marines cannot directly control the actions of independent organizations such as spouses' clubs, but added, "We expect that all who are interested in supporting Marine Corps Family Readiness would be welcome to participate and will be treated with dignity and respect."

The Defense Department hasn't issued similar guidance covering all service branches, and is taking the stance that the Fort Bragg spouses club is conforming with the existing rules because the nondiscrimination clause doesn't extend to sexual orientation.

'It's great news, seeing the Marine Corps set the standard, but we need leadership from the Pentagon to make this standard (throughout the military) - not only on this issue regarding spouse clubs but on the extension of benefits to same-sex spouses that they are able to extend under current law," said Carlsbad resident Stephen Peters of the American Military Partner Association, which advocates on behalf of partners and spouses of lesbian and gay service members.

He praised the Marine Corps, which had been the service branch most uneasy about repeal of don't ask, don't tell. "The Marine Corps putting its best foot forward is great news."

Peters' organization has been one of several groups advocating on behalf of Ashley Broadway, the wife of Fort Bragg-based Lt. Col. Heather Mack, after Broadway was denied admittance into the officers' spouses club.

The club has said it would reconsider its membership policies at an upcoming meeting.
