Career Paths of Queer Black Women

Dr. Ekaette (Philo) Mbong
Research Scientist and Science Advocate

April 15

5:30 pm | LGBTRC Conference Room

Dr. Ekaette "Philo" Mbong left her hometown of Norman, Oklahoma to attend the University of Alabama at Birmingham on a Women's Varsity Soccer Scholarship. For her undergraduate research, she studied sex determination of sea turtle hatchlings and graduated with her B.S. in Biology. She received her M.S. and Ph.D. in Biological Sciences from the University of Alabama after elucidating the interplay of viral proteins in herpes infections. Currently, she is a postdoctoral fellow at UCSD studying the effects of obesity on reproductive health.

As an African American, Dr. Mbong is keenly aware of the lack of diversity among scientists. Therefore, she has used her fellowships from the National Science Foundation and the American Society for Microbiology as launch pad for increasing equality, diversity and science awareness in her community. She is currently pursuing science policy avenues in Washington, D.C. that will allow her to continue her passion of increasing the awareness of the importance of higher education in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) in the United States.

Please RSVP to stravers@ucsd.edu so we are able to provide dinner for you, and include any dietary concerns.
