FROM BUFFALO DANCE TO STANDING ROCK, 1894 TO 2016

The Embodied and Interconnected Sovereignties of Indigenous Human and Nonhuman Persons

Dr. Tria Blu Wakpa
Wednesday, February 7, 2018
3-5PM
Social Sciences Building, Room 107

Because Indigenous peoples' very presence undermines U.S. authority, settler colonial discourses have sought to invisibilize Native peoples and nations through physical and cultural genocide and misrepresentation. Unearthing the relationship of Indigenous cultural productions to Native sovereignties therefore becomes an important political project. This talk critically examines the vital and, at times, uneasy linkages between Indigenous human and nonhuman persons' sovereignties through the lens of North American hand talk (sign language), dances, martial arts, and their convergences.

Tria Blu Wakpa received her PhD in Ethnic Studies from UC Berkeley, her MFA in Creative Writing from San Diego State University, and is currently a UC President's Postdoctoral Fellow in Dance at UC Riverside. Her book project Hand Talk: American Postcoloniality, Play, and Embodiment in Educational and Cultural Contexts examines the complexities and convergences among Native signification, performance, and performance.

Sponsored by the UCSD Department of Ethnic Studies, the Studio for Tactical Ethnography, and the Transnational & Indigenous Politics & Aesthetics Working Group

The Embodied and Interconnected Sovereignties of Indigenous Human and Nonhuman Persons

February 7, 2018; 3:00-5:00PM
Social Sciences Building, Room 107

Come out to a talk featuring Dr. Tria Blu Wakpa, who will talk about how settler colonial discourses have sought to invisibilize Native peoples and nations through physical and cultural genocide and misrepresentation. Unearthing the relationship of Indigenous cultural productions to Native sovereignties therefore becomes an important political project. This talk critically examines the vital and, at times, uneasy linkages between Indigenous human and nonhuman persons' sovereignties through the lens of North American hand talk (sign language), dances, martial arts, and their convergences.

WEEK 4

MEDITATION // REFLECTION // WELLNESS

QUEER + MINDFUL

the stars,
crystals,
& you!

ASTROLOGY, CRYSTAL HEALING, + ART WORKSHOP

MON. JAN 29TH 4-6 PM
LGBT RESOURCE CENTER
CONFERENCE ROOM

Want to know what people talk about when they talk about their "chart"? Or "moon sign"? Or are you interested in learning about crystals and their healing properties?

Come to the LGBT Resource Center and join us for Week 4's Queer and Mindful!

We will be teaching people about astrology and reading their natal charts, as well as having a crystal healing workshop. We will be giving away crystals, bags, and astrology products to decorate as supplies last.

For accessibility or specific accommodations, contact us at
AT (858) 822-3493 or RAINBOW@UCSD.EDU.
