

Scripps man to Serve on Visiting Geological Scientist Program

February 16, 1961

Tjeerd H. van Andel, Associate Research Geologist at the University of California's Scripps Institution of Oceanography, is one of a group of scientists invited to serve on the American Geological Institute's Visiting Geological Scientist Program in 1961.

Dr. van Andel will make his first appearances under the auspices of the program early in March when he will lecture at Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas from March 6 to 9.

The Visiting Geological Scientist Program is sponsored by the Institute under a grant from the National Science Foundation to stimulate the interest of students in the geological sciences.

Its aim is to stimulate the interest of students in the geological sciences.