

Using ink pen and Photoshop, I created this image to represent a part of the cultural climate here at UCSD that came to my awareness after reading Kong's chapter. The image is of a finger shushing a mouth about to speak, while clearly using American symbolism. The United States tries to pride itself on equality and equal rights to speech and visibility especially in colleges. However, there is underrepresentation and invisibility within student populations representing our country's minorities, propagating an unequal level of silence in cultural and racial interaction on campus.
