Planes leaving Los Angeles at 10 A.M. arrive in San Diego at 11:10 A.M., in time for five hours of business. Planes leaving San Diego at 10 A.M. arrive in Los Angeles at 11:10 A.M., offering the same interval for business.

No special costume is used for the trip. Passengers ride in every day attire in an enclosed cabin similar in appearance to the interior of a limousine. Each passenger is allowed 25 pounds personal hand luggage. Busses meet the planes upon arrival at each end of the line and take passengers directly to the city. Business men missing the 8 o'clock train have ample time to arrive at the field and reach their destination without loss of valuable business hours.

So steadily does the plane rise into the air and keep an even keel during the entire journey that the trip might almost be said to be uneventful in character. Leaving Hollywood, the plane crosses over Los Angeles past the orange belt, Santa Ana, Capistrano, follows the line of surf to Del Mar and proceeds inland across False Bay to San Diego. The view during the entire trip, from the time of leaving the Hollywood mountains and the sea until reaching the beautiful harbor at San Diego is inspiring and offers an entirely new and thrilling experience.
