

Moving Company to appear in Mandeville (modern dance)

May 4, 1978

The Moving Company, a modern dance company hailed for "moving bodies, colors, patterns, images, ideas and audiences," will appear at 8:30 p.m. Saturday, May 13, in the Mandeville Auditorium at the University of California, San Diego.

The company's eight dancers, under the direction of choreographer Pat Finot, chairman of the Department of Dance at California State University, Long Beach, present a repertoire ranging from original mixed media pieces to more traditionally stylistic dance forms.

The performers experiment with a wide range of audio-visual effects and performance moods. Through abstract movements, the dancers explode with energy and create what critics have called a "spellbinding exposition of moods and places even places in the human mind an international language of movement a novel without words a play without dialog the precision for which these dancers strive produces an impressive concert."

The UC San Diego appearance by The Moving Company is sponsored by the University Events Office in cooperation with the National Endowment for the Arts. Tickets which may be purchased at the UCSD Box Office (452-4559) are $5 for general admission and $3 for students.
