In the Library.

A lassie young and debonnaire
And with a countenance demure
Came to me with a trustful air
And asked if I'd a favor do her.
Why did her presence move me so
~~Why~~ Among the throng that come and go?

What made her such a winsome elf,
Came it from fashion's rare finesse,
Fastidious to array herself
In grateful symmetry of dress?
Although such grace my eye had caught
It held no place within her thought.

Her blue eye looked straight into mine
As if she saw beyond the lid
And <sup>with the</sup> a dart - an anodyne
Along the rays of vision slid;
The magic of her limpid eye
Diverted me from my reply.

So when the busy hour was o'er
I wrought with fancy's warp and woof
A tapestry of sweet amour
And she sat underneath my roof -
So real was each domestic thing
I even heard the kettle sing

My dear old dog ~~lies~~ <sup>lays</sup> on the mat
Oblivious of fly or flea
And all at once a brindle cat
Jumps up and sits upon my knee
With voice unlike her midnight tryst
Until I give her tail a twist.

For which ~~the girls~~ <sup>the girls</sup>
~~and now I meet~~ reproachful eyes
Turned on me with their mild reproof
For love, despite all tender ties -
At times will tease, or stand aloof
So I in feigned <sup>mock</sup> resentment flare
And loose the fillet from her hair.

And down her <sup>the</sup> crinkly tresses to crowd
Quite ample for both stole and hood -
Her eyes like stars <sup>through</sup> ~~to~~ rifted cloud
Or homelights twinkling through a wood -
But here Atropos <sup>came</sup> comes incog. -
A lady ~~wants~~ <sup>And asks to see</sup> a catalogue.

Ah! if in other realms than this
Old ~~Our~~ longings we might realize -
~~Such~~ <sup>And</sup> glimpses of illuding bliss
Seen in these <sup>such</sup> haunting, pensive eyes -
A heaven <sup>what that bliss joy</sup> would be to <sup>inhabit</sup> there
Our castles builded in the air.
